CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from patients who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 83 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLIER, M. D.

ATLANTA, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Collier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable.

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I believe Dr Collier can cure any case of Cancer

A QUESTION

FOR EVERYBODY.

And that includes

You, Reader!

LOOK AT THESE FIGURES!

2,050	in One Day

1,712	in One Day	in only 19 Days!
1,931	in One Day
2,076	in One Day

&c., &c., &c., &c.

EXPLANATION.

The above figures give the exact number of Subscribers received per day, for ten days past, by the publishers of the American Agriculturist, and the work has gone on in the same ratio for a long time. The circulation went up to 150,000 last year, and the subscriptions so far this year are very largely in excess of that or any previous year!

What Does it Mean?

Why, simply this, that the former readers, who have tried and proved the Agriculturist, are so convinced of its great value that they not only continue taking it for themselves, but induce their friends and neighbors to take it also.—Could there be any better evidence of its real value?

An Edition of 159,000 copies was republished in 1867. At the rate of increase for a month past the subscription list of the American Agriculturist for 1868 will reach 200,000 to 250,000.

1,000,000 Copies,

at least, and probably 3,000,000 copies, would be wanted this year if everybody should take the Agriculturist who would be profited by its perusal, ten times the small cost.

The Truth Is,

nowhere else can you get so much real value for so little money as you find in the American Agriculturist—so much for yourself—so much for your wife—so much for your children—whether you live in the city, or in a village, or in the country—whether you be farmer, or gardener, or mechanic, or merchant, or minister, or lawyer, or whatever be your pursuit.

Of Engravings,

the Agriculturist contains a large number (350 to 400 in each volume,) the most beautiful and instructive published in any journal in this or any other country. The cost of the engravings alone exceeds Ten Thousand Dollars each year. They are finely executed, beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive. The engravings are alone worth a great many times the subscription price of the paper.

Of Original Information,

For the HOUSEHOLD,
For the CHILDREN,
For the ORCHARD,
For the GARDEN,
For the FARM,
&c., &c.,

the Agriculturist is packed brim-full. It is not a cheaply-gathered, scissors-and-paste-make-up of a paper, but the publishers employ a large force of the most intelligent and practical first-class men to be found in the country. These all devote their time and energy to gathering from every possible source just such information as the people need. It is their ambition and pride to print no line that is unreliable, and to condense the greatest possible amount of useful information into the least possible space. That they succeed in doing this is fully proved by the immense number of persons that continue year after year to take and read the American Agriculturist. It has now entered upon its Twenty-seventh year, and enjoys a circulation probably exceeding the combined circulation of all other rural periodicals, not only in this country, but in the world!

Reader,

You are invited to TRY the American Agriculturist for 1868. You will find it to pay, and pay well. It costs but $1 50 for the whole year, or four copies for $5. Its immense circulation divides the cost of editing, engravings, type setting, office expenses, etc., among so many that it can be supplied at this low rate. TRY IT!

PRICE ADVANCED—PAR AND INTEREST.

The Central Pacific Railroad,

THE BEST AND PRINCIPAL PORtion of the NATIONAL TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT, is being rapidly carried forward by an unprecedented working force, and it is reasonably certain that the continuous overland railroad connection from New York to San Francisco will be made in 1870.

The United States Government furnishes, upon a subordinate and contingent lien, half the means for constructing the main stem line; and besides an absolute grant of 12,800 acres of valuable public lands per mile, the Central Pacific Railroad Company have received from California sources donations and concessions worth more than $3,000,000. The available resources of this company are therefore abundant for the purpose, amounting to $77,000,000, on the first, 720 miles of the line, including loans secured by a first mortgage upon the whole property, to the same amount only as the United States subsidy bonds.

The results already attained, although under comparatively unfavorable circumstances, afford substantial ground for believing the Central Pacific to be the Most Favored, Productive and Valuable Railroad Enterprise in the Country.

In consequence of the large and rapidly increasing demand, the price of these bonds has been advanced, and the company are now offering for sale a limited amount of their

First Mortgage Six per Cent. Bonds,

Principal and interest payable in gold coin, in sums of $1,000 each, at par, and accrued interest from January 1st, in currency.

These bonds, it is believed, possess the elements of safety, reliability and profit in a greater degree than any other class of corporate securities now offered, and are therefore very desirable for steady investments of surplus capital.

Investors will bear in mind the following advantages:

I. They are the first mortgage on one of the most valuable and productive lines of railroad in the world.

II. The actual earnings from local business in 1867 were more than four times the annual interest engagements.

III. The hard part of the work is now done, and the prospects of rapid completion are favorable.

IV. The company have liberal subsidies, which enable them to prosecute the work with great vigor.

V. The management has been exceedingly prudent and frugal.

VI. There is already a large and growing settlement on the completed and graded line.

VII. The lands promise to be of immense value, 37,638 acres having been already sold.

VIII. Both principal and interest are explicitly made payable in gold coin.

IX. Both the aggregate amount of issue and their standing in Europe will insure for them continued activity and a high rank among standard securities.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of from ten to fifteen per cent in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

Of timid Miss Muffy,
Who fled from the taffit;
Of Bobby, who sailed on the sea;
Of Jack and his Gill;
Of the moose at the mill;
And baby that rocked on the tree.

Sleepy and dozy,
To cuddle up cozy,
And hush-a-by-baby with me.

From the Children's Hour.

THE LION.

BY IRENE L——.

"Isn't he a splendid fellow!" said Albert Lee, as he turned to the picture of a lion. "What beauty, and majesty, and strength! No wonder he is called the 'King of Beasts.' I'd rather be a lion than any other animal."

"I'd rather be a lamb, or a dove," spoke out little sister Helen. "Lions are cruel."

"Oh, but I wouldn't be a cruel lion," replied Albert. "One needn't be cruel because he is strong."

The children's mother, who had been listening, now spoke:

"No, my son; one need not be cruel because he is strong. You have said the right thing in the right words. Nor, to be a lion, must you become a beast, for there is no quality or character in animals that does not exist in men."

"I don't know about that, mother," answered Albert. "A man can't fly like a bird, nor live under water like a fish."

"I said quality or character, my son; meaning what we have in our minds. Every animal is known by its quality almost as well as by its form. The lamb is innocent, the tiger is cruel, the fox cunning, and the ox patient. The lion has strength and courage. He is mightiest of all the beasts, and can destroy them if he will. In the souls of men are to be found all the good or evil qualities that exist in animals. The lion and the lamb are there; the eagle and the dove; the tiger and the kid. A lion-like man is one with a bold, strong, clear-seeing mind; one who, by his great mental strength and knowledge, has power over other men. But this power may be used for good as well as evil. Because a man has strength and courage, he need not be cruel."

"God is called a lion in the Bible," said Albert.

"Yes, in the Revelation of St. John He is called the Lion of the tribe of Judah. And in one of the Epistles the devil is called a 'roaring lion.' So you see that the quality represented by a lion may be good or evil."

"Then," said Albert, drawing up his slender body to its full height, "let me be a lion. Not a cruel lion; but brave and strong, and not afraid of any other beast. No wolf shall hurt this little lamb;" and he put his arm tenderly about Hattie. "I will be gentle to the innocent and weak, but a terror to the cruel ones that seek to do harm."

"The lion's life, my son, is not one of ease and comfort. The King of Beasts has many to dispute his power."

"But he is stronger than them all, mother," replied Albert, with glowing cheeks and eyes full of manly courage.

"Yes, the true lion-quality is strongest in the human soul, and, whether it be good or evil, bears down all opposition. When you are older I will more fully explain to you what the lion-quality of the soul is, and then you will see why it is so strong and overmastering."

"Tell me now," urged the boy. "May be I can understand."

The mother thought for a little while, and then said:

"A few weeks ago there was trouble in school, and you were mixed up with it."

"Yes, ma'am; I remember all about that."

"For a time the whole school was against you."

"I know they were; but they didn't put me down. I was stronger than them all."

"Why?"

"Because I had right and truth on my side."

"And these gave you the lion's strength. Now, the very opposite of these have power and dominion sometimes. If your teacher, instead of being a just man, had favored those who were against you; and let what was wrong and false prevail, you would have been hurt instead of coming off victorious. The lion of hell, that seeks to hunt and destroy, would have had dominion."

"You have heard me speak of the power of truth," and of the dominion of truth," continued the mother. "It is said of truth that it is mighty and will prevail. You were strong, as you said just now, because you had right and truth on your side. Right, as well as truth, remember; for right is the very soul of truth, and gives it power."

"Now, the true man-lion must have the purest love in his heart, and the highest truth in his mind, in order to have power; and these come only from God. Having these, he is not afraid of any evil thing; for the Lion of the tribe of Judah has given him his own divine strength."

Albert sat very thoughtful for a good while. Then looking up with a rich glow on his face, he said:

"I shall be a lion, mother. Strong and brave, but not cruel. A good lion."

"May God give you of his love and his wisdom in liberal measure, so that your strength may be divine." Thus the mother prayed, lifting her eyes heavenward.

FARM AND GARDEN.

The Superior Agricultural Advantages of the South.

We notice that the well-known "political economist," Cary, of Philadelphia, has been writing a letter to a New Englander upon the superiority of the South as an agricultural country. He not only declares it richer in its quality of soil than the North, but also richer than the West. He expresses the opinion that the flow of emigration will soon turn from the poorer soil of the Northwest to the less exhausted and more prolific lands of the South and Southwest, where the laborer will not only be better rewarded for his toil, but where the mildness of the climate will enable him to get through the year with less waste, or more properly speaking, consumption of property, than the more vigorous climate of the North would demand.

The great West, once called the "granary of the world," will soon have very little yearly surplus to spare. Turning her attention to manufactures, and also by the rapid growth of her cities, where an increasing amount of merchandising is going on, adding to her consuming population, the resources of the agriculturists are being drawn upon to a greater degree yearly; and as the proportion of agriculturists to other branches of industry is growing smaller in that section, as time rolls on, we shall see the surplus of cereals become less and less, until finally the local demand for food will fully equal the local supply.

The superior quality of Southern wheat and flour over those of the North and West is well known. They command the highest prices in every market of the world, and there needs only the same attention to the production of breadstuffs in the South that the West has shown in order to give the cotton section the highest rank as a grower of cereals.

It is well known that for the future the South is to stand more upon its own resources. It will not, as of old, depend to so great a degree upon the North for its manufactures. There will be as great a demand for the skilled labor of the workshop as for the intelligent and progressive labor of the field. Black labor is out of the question, under so-called "freedom." It is now as unfitted for the plantation as for the factory. In the former, under white guidance, Sambo could be made to earn something, but under no sort of guidance could he be of service where brains have to combine with muscle, as must be the case in the workshop.

There are for sale in the State of Kentucky to-day over 7,6000,000 acres in farms, the finest lands in the world unimproved; and also 5,000,000 acres of wild land, two-thirds of which is fit for cultivation.

In Georgia there are over 10,400,000 acres of rich, wild land. In Tennessee over 8,500,000; in Alabama, 13,400,000, and in Arkansas 24,000,000 acres.

In these States the climate is splendid, the land rich, and all the cereals, the miscellaneous farm products, and the finest fruits will grow.

To show the superiority of the States named over those of the Northwest we have only to name the products that are raised within their borders: wheat, rye, oats, barley, hemp, corn, cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice, potatoes, all kinds of vegetables, and nearly every kind of fruit; peaches, apples, strawberries, all the wild berries, currants, figs, grapes, pears and quinces. Nuts of many varieties grow there also; and the rivers which flow through the sections are nearly all navigable. The advantages these States offer to the emigrant are, their ability to produce every article which may be grown in the higher latitudes, with the productions of the southern portion of the temperate zone also, giving a wider range for the tiller of the soil, and a bigger field to harvest from.—N. Y. Day Book.

From the American Agriculturist.

The Cattle of the Channel Islands.

Wherever domestic animals with in a limited district are subjected to similar circumstances, being bred and used for the same purpose, the characteristics and looks of different animals gradually become very much alike. In this way all the breed of cattle and sheep have been established, and it is usually the case that such a breed of animals is peculiarly well adapted to the uses of the district in which it is formed, (better indeed, than to any other,) and that it loses more or less of its distinguishing characters when removed. In the place of its nativity a breed is therefore prized; and the views taken by intelligent breeders establish a uniformity of taste, in color, size, and points, which after a few generations give rise to differences between the cattle in contiguous valleys, or islands, as in the case of the Channel Islands. To a close observer noticeable peculiarities are usually seen even in the cattle of neighboring parishes, or even farms, if the herds have not been much crossed.

The group of the Channel Islands consists of six, the principal of which are Jersey, Guernsey, and Alderney; Jersey being the largest and Alderney the smallest. This group, which is subject to the British crown, lies in the bay of St. Michael, off the coast of Normandy and Brittany in the north of France, and is famous for butter, cider, perry and parsnips, and for a race of peculiar cattle distinguished for the richness of their milk.

The original stock from which the different breeds into which this race has become naturally divided sprung, was doubtless from the adjacent main-land, and was, perhaps, also essentially influenced by animals brought from a distance, which might easily have been landed from ships touching at the islands. Since the cows of these islands have become so valuable and sought after in foreign countries, the greatest jealousy has sprung up that no taint of foreign blood should be justly imputed to the breed of any farmer; so that now the cattle of each island, particularly of Guernsey and Jersey, have been quite free from any foreign intermixture for many years, and every year their characteristics are better defined.

Dr. Twaddell, in an account of a visit to the islands, given before the Philadelphia Agricultural Society not long since, said that there are 3,000 Jersey and 1,200 Guernsey cows exported from the islands every year.

The name Alderney, frequently given to this breed, is essentially a misnomer, for it is admitted that the cattle of the island of Alderney are a mixture of Guernseys and Jerseys, and not of so uniform a character as those of either, and hence not entitled to be considered a distinct breed; and certainly not to give the name to the breed which is found so much more uniformly characterized upon the island of Jersey.

SOFT-SHELLED EGGS.—An English poultry manager suggests the following treatment:

"When a hen lays this sort of egg, and not habitually, the occurrence is generally accompanied with hard or full crop. In that case it is owing to indigestion, to be treated with one or two teaspoonfuls of English gin. One cause is said to be over-feeding when fowls are too fat. These eggs are generally dropped from the roost, and if it is not too high from the floor, or if they fall on straw, may be saved entire, and used for puddings. As to symptoms, experience will make known the indications, and the time when a hen is about to pass one of these eggs, by appearing somewhat dull and uneasy when walking about, when proper precautions should be taken to secure it, and prevent the other hens from gobbling it up. The writer has a favorite hen which always regularly drops these eggs from her roost, and never lays any others, and has done so for these five years past, although in perfect health."

Probably the medicinal effect of American gin would be quite as efficacious as that of "English." We give his statement for what it is worth, with the remark that the trouble is usually considered due to a lack of lime in the food, and this is supplied by giving the hens shells, bones, and other forms of lime.—American Agriculturist.

DELICIOUS SOFT GINGERBREAD.—Take 1 cup of molasses, 1 cup of sugar, 1 cup of butter, 3 cups of flour, 3 eggs, 1 tablespoonful of ginger, and the same of allspice and cinnamon, a wine glass of brandy, 1 teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a cup of milk, to be added the last thing before baking. Mix the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the molasses, eggs, flour and spices; lastly the milk.—Rural New Yorker.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans; then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No torbiddog of the Word: no tamperlog with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the appreciation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum; or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues quiet, with only a moderate degree of activity in most branches of trade. Our leading staple has been in good request at about previous rates, but the demand for sugar has been less active, and the movement in Western produce has exhibited little animation.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed at about previous rates, Ordinary ruling at 17½ to 18c., Good Ordinary at 19 to 19½, Low Middling at 20¼ to 20½, Middling at 21 to 21½, and Strict Middling at 22. On Saturday the movement commenced with a fair inquiry, at rather easier rates, predicated on the decline at Liverpool; but at a later hour, owing to an advance in gold and foreign exchange, and some competition among buyers, the advantage was again on the side of the factor, and the day's sales summed up 5,000 bales, mostly on the basis of 20¼ to 20½c. for Low Middling, and 21¼ to 21½c. for Middling. On Monday the demand continued fair, and although factors were more stringent in their pretensions, at least before the receipt of the cable dispatches, which had a depressing influence, and operations were moreover restricted by the limited extent of the supply offering, yet the business was again to a fair amount, embracing 5,300 bales, at irregular prices, without any quotable change. On Tuesday the market opened with a very general inquiry, but with operations checked by the scanty supply offering, and the non-receipt of the usual money telegrams by cable. At a later hour, however, the demand received an additional impulse from the receipt of dispatches reporting the Liverpool market active at an improvement of ⅛d., and, more samples having been opened, the movement became quite animated, resulting in sales of 7,200 bales, at stiffening prices, showing an average advance of fully ¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,500 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 12,886 bales, against 9,677 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 3,209 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 459,560 bales, against 576,847 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 253,612 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 120,756 bales to Great Britain, of 64,537 to France, and of 115,181 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	—	to —
Ordinary	18	to 18¾
Good Ordinary	19½	to 20
Low Middling	20¾	to 20¾
Middling	21¼	to 21½
Strict Middling	22	to —

Sugar.—The demand is limited. The receipts, though light, sell very slowly, and prices have declined. We now quote as follows: 13c. per lb. for Good Common, 13¼ to 13½ for Fair, 14 to 14⅜ for Good Fair, 14½ for Fully Fair, 14¾ to 15 for Prime, 15½ for Choice, 16 to 16¼ for Yellow Clarified, and 16¾ for White.

Molasses.—The receipts are light, and sell slowly at the lower prices. Fermenting is held at 65 to 70c. per gallon, Reboiled 68 to 82, Prime 85, Cistern Bottom 90. A cargo of 200 hogsheads Muscovado sold on private terms. It is quoted at 45 to 54c. per gallon.

Flour.—Although the supplies are light the market has been unsettled since our last review. Buyers have held back, and prices for the medium and lower grades have declined 50c. per bbl. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 3,500 bbls., part on private terms and part at $10 25 to $10 50 per bbl. for Superfine, $10 87½ to $11 for Double Extra, and $13 to $15 for Choice Extra.

Butter.—The supply of butter is not large. It is in fair jobbing demand, and we quote at 25 to 30c. per lb. for inferior Western, 30 to 35 for medium, and 40 to 45 for choice. Goshen is selling at 53 to 55 for dairy lots, and 56 to 58c. at retail. On Saturday twenty firkins Western sold at 30c. per lb.

MY TWO BROTHERS.

THE TRAGEDY IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to give some vent to my aching and almost overburdened heart through the columns of the Advocate. I suppose you have heard of the awful tragedy in Newton county, Mississippi. On the night of the 25th of January my two dear brothers, Daniel A. and Edward R. Dennis, were fenlly murdered by a party of negroes, concealed in ambush for that hellish purpose. The causes of the dreadful tragedy are substantially as followe: My brothers missed some hogs, and had sufficieat reason to suspect that they had been stolen and killed by some negroes living near by. They accordingly went over and found a negro woman cooking fresh pork. They asked her where she got it. She said she got it from one "uncle Heary." Henry denied it. Subsequently the negro woman showed whero the meat was buried in a box, under the ground, in the yard, and the husband of the woman confessed to killing the hogs. My brothers told the negro he must go before the magistrato. He said he would do se as soon as he eat his breakfast. Brother Edward proceeded to a little town by the name of Hickory, and waited until evening, but the negro did aot come. He went before the justice and sued out a warrant, which was placed in the hands of an officer, and they returned.

The officer, my two brothers, and five other men, as a posse, proceeded after dark to the negro's house—not more than a quarter of a mile distant—to execute the warrant, but the thief was not at home. Not suspecting any conspiracy or design on the part of the negroes, they lighted a torch and returned unsuspectingly home. Brother Edward bore the torch, and brother Daniel was walking in front of him.

When within aboat one hundred and fifty yards of the house they were fired on by a party of negroes lying in ambush, at very close range. My brother Daniel, it is supposed, was shot instantly dead, and three others were wounded. The negroes then rushed in from their hiding place, the remainder of the whites fled, and brother Edward was left alone to contend with twelve or fifteen black fiends. Of course such an unequal contest could have but one termination. While in the act of being murdered he was heard to say: "Don't kill me." His head was frightfully crushed, and apparently run through with a sword.

He was found lying on his pistol, with three barrels emptied. It is supposed he gave a death wound to the first huge negro who oucountered him, as the negro, when afterwards captured, was found pierced with two deadly bullet holes. Bro. Daniel was shot and his head crushed in.

All wae over now. Tho silence of death was there! One of the white comrades who had left during the tragedy went down to the house and reported. Only one of my brothers—Edward—was married. He had a largo family of children. They, with my dear and aged mother, were living together. O heaven! what a ecene, as the family go forth with lighted torches to hnat up the dead! I am nervous and almost frantic while I write. Black fiends, like demons from the lower regions, flit across my vision.

My brothers served in the war, and Edward passed through several battles unhurt. They returned home through all this to be murdered by a set of vagabond negroes, and that, too, in endeavoring to protect their rights against these miserable thieves. The citizens of Garlandsville and neighborhood turned out en massa in search of the murderers, and most of them have been arrested, and we have reason to believe that a number of them are in an "ambush" from which they will not sally forth again soon, and where "leagues" and "bureaus" can't come to their resoue. Such is a part of the result of Radicalism, leagues and bureaus—a combination of diaholism. We have no government. How long will these things continue? "O, Lerd, how loeg?"

Daniel Asbury Dennis and Edward Richmond Dennis were sons of Richmond and Vashti Dennis, born in Warren county, Georgia; the elder fifty-four, and the younger forty-one years of age. In 1849, with the family, they emigrated to Macon county, Ala., and in 1858 removed to Newton county, Mississippi, where they met their fatal end, as above described. They were both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the younger—Edward—had filled the office of class-leader and steward. But recently I had three noble brothers; now I have but one. My only comfort is the hope of meeting them in a better world. By this tragic event an aged and infirm mother is suddenly bereft of her two eldest sons, a worthy and happy wife is made a widow, and six beautiful and interesting children are made orphans. I earnestly commend them to the prayers of the church. May the people of Newton county treat them tenderly.

Wesley B. Dennis.

It was the duty of the several presiding eldors to divide these assessments amoag the charges of their respective districts. If they did this the deficiency of each charge may be known by referring to the Conference minutes, pages 8–9.

Has this collection been made in each charge? As yet I have received but one report. Have the presidiag elders looked after this thing? Have they informed the aew pastors of the amounts deficient on their several charges? Have all the pastors made an earnest effort to raise theso deficiencies? Brethren, look at the figures which follow the name of your district. To what is the shame of this thing to be attributed? To the carelessness of the presiding elders, the negligence of the pastors, or the niggardliness of the church?

Brethren, one and all, if you have failed at the time appointed to carry out the requirements of the above resolution, let me suggest that you immediately make this collection. And be sure to send me every dollar assessed your chargo. It takes a dollar to pay a dollar. Ten dollars will not satisfy a twenty dollar assessment. Figures are stubborn things, and cannot be stretched so as to cover double the amount they represent.

Wm. Sharpard.
Chairman of Joint Board of Finance.

P. S.—On the 1st day of April I will report the receipts through the Advocate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington, March 7.—The only circumstance that has transpired in the impeachment case since yesterday was the service of the writ of summons.

At 7 o'clock this evening the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate appeared at the White House, and was at once admitted to the President's room, where Mr. Johnson was engaged in business with two of his secretaries.

After the usual salutation the Sergeant-at-Arms said: "Mr. President, I am directed by the Senate of the United States to deliver to you this writ of summoas." At the same time handiag Mr. Johnson a sealed envelope or package.

The President replied — "Very well, sir, I will give it attention."

The Sergeant-at-Arms then bid Mr. Johnson good evening and withdrew.

The writ is signed by the Chief Justice, and recites the action of the House of Representatives; gives a copy of the articles of impeachment; demands that an answer be made to the summons, and the President to appear before the Senate next Friday, and then abide by the orders and commands of the officer; to receive the writ personally or by leaving the same at his residence or at his place of business.

It is expected that the President will, on Friday next, ask for thirty days within which to prepare and file an answer.

Washington, March 9.—The Chronicle says Vicker's credentials will be referred to the Judiciary Committee, upon some information furnished by Scheack, of some acts during the war.

The impeachment managers are examining resident and have sent for distant reporters of Johnson's speeches. The impression grows that the President will appear personally.

It seems conceded that Thursday's and Friday's proceedings, without further effort on the part of the defence, have choked Wade's vote.

Chase's rights in the court excite angry argument in the Radical newspapere. Chase claims the right to argne on all questioas, and vote on all but the verdict.

Chase refused yeeterday to sign the summons until the verbiage of the writ conformed to his ideas.

Washington, March 10.—House—The Reconstruction Committee reported the following:

"Whereas, The people of Alabama, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'an act for the more efficient government of the rebel States,' passed March 2d, 1867, and acts supplementary thereto, have formed a Constitution of State government, which is republican in form; and

"Whereas, At an election held, commencing on the fourth of February, 1868, a large majority of the legal voters of said State voting at said election, voted for the adoption of said Constitution; therefore

"Be it enacted, etc., That the said State of Alabama shall be recognized and admitted as one of the States of these United States of America, and shall be entitled to representation in Congress as soon as the Legislature of said State, the members of which were elected at the election mentioned in the preamble to this act, shall have duly ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That said State of Alabama shall be recognized and admitted into the Union upon the following conditions, to wit: That the right of suffrage of citizens of the United States shall never be denied or abridged in said State on account of race or color or previous condition of servitude, and Congress shall have power to repeal any act of said State legislature in violation or in derogation of the provisions of this act."

Ordered to be printed and made the special order for to-morrow.

The bill selling lands in the South Carolina islands passed. It confirms Lincoln's instructions to tax collectors in 1863. Persons who acquired claims under Sherman's order of 1865 must obtain warrants before the 1st of May, 1868. The land is to be sold in small lots at nominal prices to negroes, residents and heads of families.

The Committee on Freedmen's Affairs introduced a bill continuing the Freedmen's Bureau one year, and authorizing the Secretary of War to re-establish it wherever discontinued.

A communication from Grant relative to New Orleans removals was referred to the Reconstruction Committee. Adjourned.

Senate.—A resolution was passed admitting to the galleries by tickets during the impeachment trial.

There was a full cabinet meeting to-day, including Thomas as Secretary of War.

The President has ordered Grant to send him no communications through Stanton.

Washington, March 11.—Mr. Stanbery has, upon consideration, concluded that it would be better that he should resign his position as Attorney General, in order to take part as counsel for the President in the impeachment trial, and accordingly today formally presented his resignation.

Mr. Johnson has the matter under consideration, and will doubtless accept the resignation.

The new reconstruction bill became a law to-day by expiration of the constitutional ten (10) days.

The Pennsylvania State Convention indorses Grant and Curtin for President and Vice President. The following is among the resolutions:

"That we earnestly call upon the Senate of the United States, sitting as a court of impeachment, to proceed without fear, favor or affection, and that the people of Pennsylvania will stand by and maintain a just judgment."

They also return a vote of thanks to Stanton.

Nothing further from New Hampshire. Republican majority estimated 2,500.

Washington, March 11.—A telegram just received from New Hampshire, from a well-informed Democrat, says that State has gone Republican by about 2,000. The increased vote is about 10,000. He adds: "The Republicans had too much money for us."

We copy as follows from the special Washington correspondence of the St. Louis Democrat (Radical), dated the 8th inst.:

THE PRESIDENT'S COUNSEL.

The President's counsel have not all been finally agreed upon as yet. It is not considered certain that Judge Black will serve. Wm. B Evarts has been applied to, but may be prevented from taking part. P. P. Curtis, of Mass., is thought by the President's friends to be one of the strongest men among those of the counsel, he having written a dissenting opinion in a decision, and on that account it is believed he will carry considerable political strength with Republicans. David Dudley Field has been retained and is at work on the case with Black and Stanbery. The latter, if not regularly engaged, is in the case. The cabinet is also being freely consulted in the whole arrangement of the case. There has been some casting around to find an able lawyer to add to the defense who has influence with Republicans.

INTENTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S LAWYERS.

As the result of the conferences already had with a view to preparing the defense, those in the ring say the President's lawyers feel perfectly satisfied with their case; that they intend to show that the whole practice for all administrations has been to remove under the Constitution, and that the tenure of office bill is an act so palpably unconstitutional as to justify Johnson in disregarding it the same as if the act had been passed saying he should send no messages to Congress, which the Constitution says he shall.

To meet the Butler and Bingham articles, however, they find no precedents, and these really give them considerable trouble. It is understood that the counsel for the defense will first challenge various Senators, for instance Wade on the ground of interest, and Sumner, Chandler and others, for having expressed opinions. Next they will contend that the Senate is a court, and that the President has the right to have a full court present, and that ten States, with their twenty members of the court, are absent.

RESIGNATION CONTEMPLATED IN A CERTAIN CONTINGENCY.

If votes upon those two points should be strongly against them—of which few now doubt—then the next step, it is thought, will be for a long continuance. If this should be refused, or the continuance granted be only of moderate length, it is stated by some, in the President's counsel, that he may offer his resignation, on the ground that such votes and refusal boded no good to him, and that a resignation would save him from the political disabilities obtaining upon impeachment.

THE QUESTION AS TO CHALLENGE OF SENATORS.

As to the challenge of Senators the board of managers have looked into the question closely, and find that all precedents in England and in this country are entirely against any such rights. No factious delay is expected on the part of Mr. Johnson's lawyers, as some of them are men who could not afford to be thus used.

THE LINES OF THE PRESIDENT'S DEFENCE.

The New York Express says: "The friends of impeachment say that the whole thing will be over in six days. The friends of the President say that thirty days will pass before the impeachment will be reached. They have been advised by the ablest counsel in the land that Senators can be objected to as well as jurors, and the men who have prejudged the case cannot sit on the trial. They intend to object to every Senator who has expressed an opinion on the matter, and in case of a denial, to bring forward witnesses. They intend to contest the matter inch by inch, and use every legal defeace that the law allows. If all Senators who have expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the President shall be set aside, the jury to try the President will be a small one."

PRESIDENT JOHNSON AND HIS CABINET.

The zeal and vigor with which we deem it our duty to defend the rights of the President in the present grave conjuncture render it proper that we should separate the personal from the public aspects of this exciting controversy. We cannot consent to be parties to a personal quarrel between Andrew Johnson and Edwin M. Stanton. The Democratic party has no greater objection to Stanton's being Secretary of War during the last year of this Presidential term than it had to his holding that position during the first, or the second, or the third year of Mr. Johnson's administration. A change to which we should have attached importance two years ago has become indifferent to us now. We should certainly prefer Mr. Johnson to Mr. Wade for President during the remaining year of the term, but Mr. Johnson has become so powerless, in consequence of the Radical legislation, that the mere change of men will be attended with no very important results. Mr. Wade, to be sure, will have a freer control of the Federal patronage, but as the important offices have been all along, and are now, filled by Republicans, the substitution of a Radical for Mr. Johnson will make little difference in the relative strength of parties. We defend Mr. Johnson on purely public grounds. The revolutionary recklessness manifested in his impeachment will profit the Democratic party by arousing and disgusting the country; and we oppose it from no personal or party motives, but only in the interest of free institutions.

Mr. Johnson is not a Democratic President, but a Republican President. The chronic difficulty between him and Congress is a quarrel in the Republican party. He was not elected by our votes; he has never deferred to the wishes of our leaders; he never gave his patronage, while he had patronage to give, to men who possessed our confidence; and he has not sought our counsel in the steps by which the quarrel between him and Congress has been advanced to the present crisis. He accepted the policy and kept the Cabinet of his predecessor. The constancy with which he has resisted the revolutionary measures of the Radicals deserves the approbation of all virtuous men; but the methods of his resistance have been ill-judged, short-sighted, weak and temporizing. They have resulted as half measures commonly do, in great emergencies, in increasing embarrassments to himself and a succession of triumphs to his adversaries. If he had been amenable to advice, and had sought the advice of Democrats of recognized standing, he might have been spared many mortifications, and matters would not have advanced to the present disastrous pass. He has been so right and steady in principle that it is difficult to condemn him; but he has been so lacking in administrative tact that the Democratic party must disclaim all responsibility for his modes of operation.

The present unfortunate imbroglio, in which his enemies have every advantage of him, might easily have been avoided. Why did he not remove Stanton when he had the unquestioned power? That he failed to do so was not the fault of the Democratic party. We suggested, we petitioned, we clamored; we gave every proof of our detestation of this bold, bad man; and if Mr. Johnson had had any inclination to court our favor, or respect our wishes, he would have put Stanton out of office at a time when his removal would have been acquiesced in by the Republican party. Stanton is no more odious to Democrats than he was three years ago.—New York World.

THE MOTIVE OF IMPEACHMENT.

Several of the Radical journals comment, half boastingly, but with suppressed wonder, on the apparent apathy of the people in regard to the impeachment of their President. It appears that they are somewhat disappointed in not having created a greater sensation by their bold revolutionary movement. Let them have patience; the popular sentiment will in due time find its expression with sufficient vigor and earnestness to satisfy the conspirators in their utmost cravings for excitement and convulsion. The fiercest storms have the gentlest prelude, and the deepest and most powerful currents flow with the least noise and the calmest surface. The present crisis is fraught with so much importance to the general welfare that the masses, realizing the presence of a great danger, and concentrating their energies for action, not for talk. Not that we believe that there is any disposition on the part of the people to resort to violent measures in their antagonism to the Radical programme. The popular intelligence too well appreciates the situation, and too justly estimates the resources that are available against the purposes of Congress to invoke a trial of physical strength in this emergency. The strength of the Radicals lies in the opportunities afforded by their Congressional majorities; outside of Congress they are weak—the sentiment of the people gives them no staff to lean upon, and at the ultimate tribunal, the ballot box, their defeat is but a question of time, and of time so close upon the present that it is not worth the while to seek a sterner remedy in the intervening space. Still, the people are fully conscious of the consequences that will follow if the Radical plot should be consummated. With the evidences before us of the ruinous results of Radical legislation, it is not difficult to foresee the calamities that would befall the Republic—then no longer a Republic—if the President should be deposed and the Executive authority, as well as the legislative, should be exercised by a faction without principle, without hope of popular support, and aiming simply at the perpetuation of their party supremacy.—New York News.

Startling Facts.—Ohio Pays More Taxes than all the Southern States.—In a speech at Mansfield, Ohio, Hon. A. G. Thurman, United States Senator elect, stated some facts which are well calculated to impress the people of the North with the direct interest which they have in restoring the peace and prosperity of the South. Speaking of the taxes derived from internal revenue alone, Mr. Thurman says that the amount paid by the whole ten of the Southern States for the last fiscal year was $19,093,740; in the same year Ohio paid $25,081,409, so that the Southern States, which formerly paid their full share, if not more, of the taxation of the country, are now so reduced that in the last fiscal year Ohio paid $5,387,000 more than them all. Senator Thurman then undertakes to demonstrate that the taxation of the people of this country is far greater than ever was imposed upon any people. In the last fiscal year five hundred millions were collected in taxes by the general government alone. The taxes collected by the States amount to not quite two hundred millions more, making the entire taxation, in round numbers, seven hundred millions of dollars. The gross annual production of the industry of the United States, according to the census of 1860, was two thousand millions of dollars. Allowing for the diminished production of the South, and for increased prices, it is not supposed to be greater now. Thus more than one-third of the whole product of the country is absorbed by taxes.

These startling facts are doubtless very interesting to Ohio; but the cotton tax alone is $25,000,000.—[Editor.]

PREACHER-LIFE.

MY FIRST CIRCUIT.

I shall never forget the feelings with which I left my mother's home to go to my first appointment. It was a cold December morning, and about an hour before day, so that I might be in time for the railroad train. The solemn stillness of the hour, the weeping of mother and sisters, and the heavy weight pulling down my own heart, altogether, will serve always to keep fresh in my memory that morning and its experiences. It was all the harder to bear because I had not been taught that I would soon become reconciled to my change, and even find, after awhile, a soul-satisfying delight in the duties of the ministry. On the contrary, I did not think anything else than that it would always seem just as it did then—a sundering of every joyous or refreshing tie, a life of stern, dry, uncompromising duty merely.

I was landed at the house of a local preacher, to whose house I had been directed, and felt strangely indeed at hearing myself announced as "our new preacher." I received a cordial welcome, however, and found in his house a genial Christian home until arrangements for the year could be made for me. A few days after my arrival at his house came the close of the old year. We determined to hold a watch-night meeting, as his family were absent at an entertainment in the neighborhood. We held class-meeting, love feast and prayer meeting, besides reading aloud several appropriate sermons out of his well-selected library. It was a blessed season to me. I began already to realize that there were bright spots even in preacher-life. We both laid ourselves more unreservedly upon the altar of consecration. He had been for years compromising with his conscience in regard to entering the itineracy. Impressions were formed that night, which were strengthened during the association of the coming year, that resulted in causing him to give up an eight thousand dollar practice of medicine and offer himself to the next annual Conference as a traveling preacher. Now he fills one of the most important and responsible stations in the M. E. Church South. God requited him for the cordial reception and kindly entertainment of the least of his servants by making that servant the instrument of introducing him into the path of duty, the blessed gospel ministry. May we ever continue to be of mutual influence for good to each other.

A CONTRAST.

As I got on board the train for my first circuit my heart was made even heavier by meeting with an intimate young friend of mine. I sat and contrasted our future.—Once our paths in life had laid right alongside of each other—our hopes and aims and prospects pretty nearly identical. But now how different! He was just returning from a visit in which he had completed the arrangements to marry one of the most gifted and attractive of women. He was youthful, intelligent, handsome, wealthy, and with a numerous circle of admiring friends. He was joyous and light-hearted, as the future promised everything almost that the world could give, while I had renounced all prospects of wealth, position, pleasure, or even home comforts, to become a Methodist preacher, to go up into the Mississippi swamp, among entire strangers, voluntarily to receive the poor pay, the hardships, the insults, the dangers that fall to the lot of an itinerant. I imagined that his face expressed pity for me, and very certainly his presence was suggestive of very painful thoughts to me. So I turned away.

But what poor judges we are of what constitutes true happiness and what is really best for us. Just about three months after my arrival on my circuit I was attracted to an article in a newspaper headed "Duel at the Bascomb Course." I read it, and found that my friend had been shot, at the first fire, through the head, and had fallen instantly dead. The contrast between us once had been great—so great as to cause bitter regrets to my foolish heart. But ah! how great now. He had been called suddenly to leave all his flattering earthly prospects, and stand in the presence of the Great Judge, while yet the flush of anger was on his cheek. I was still in the path of duty, though a lowly one, and had the pleasing assurance that my God was smiling on my life. This was an impressive though a painful lesson to me of the vanity of earthly things, and with a heart sorrowful for the fate of my friend, and grateful for the forbearance of my God, I turned with increased devotion to His work.

The circuit, for several reasons, was pretty badly broken down before I went there. The congregations, never large at best, were now meager indeed. I longed to be brought into contact with the people. So I resolved that even though my sermons would not be so carefully prepared, I would go around and talk and pray with them at their homes. Many blessed seasons did I have with them, and I soon found that this was the very way to increase the congregations.

In the spring the country was almost entirely inundated by the breaking of the levee. Then our usual mode of going to church was in boats. It was a good time to preach to the negroes. They could not work, of course, as the water was over the land, so there would be nothing to do but make the announcement for preaching, and we would all repair to the gin-house, and in the lint room I would tell to them, as best I could, the story of the cross.

Calling in, in the fall, the neighboring preachers, we had a gracious revival, and I went to Conference with a thankful and a hopeful heart. C. G. A.

"THE LORD LIVETH."

There dwelt in the east of Scotland a pious clergyman, who had presided for a number of years over a small but respectable congregation. In the midst of his active career of usefulness he was suddenly removed by death, leaving behind him a wife and a number of helpless children. The small stipend allowed him by his congregation had been barely sufficient to meet the current expenses of his family; and at his death no visible means were left for their support. The death of her husband preyed deeply upon the heart of the poor afflicted widow; while the dark prospect which the future presented filled her mind with the most gloomy apprehensions. By her lonely fireside she sat, the morning after her sad bereavement, lamenting her forlorn and destitute condition, when her little son, a boy of five years of age, entered the room. Seeing the deep distress of his mother, he stole softly to her side and, placing his little hand in hers, looked wistfully into her face, and said: "Mother, mother, is God dead?" Soft as the gentle whisper of an angel did the simple accents of the dear boy fall upon the ear of the disconsolate and almost heart-broken mother. A gleam of heavenly radiance lighted up, for a moment, her pale features. Then snatching up her little boy, and pressing him fondly to her bosom, she exclaimed: "No, no, my son, God is not dead; he lives, and has promised to be a Father to the fatherless, a Husband to the widow. His promises are sure and steadfast, and upon them I will firmly and implicitly rely." Her tears were dried, and her murmurings forever hushed. The event proved that her confidence was not misplaced. The congregation over which her husband had worthily presided generously settled upon her a handsome annuity, by which she was enabled to support her family, not only comfortably, but genteelly. The talents of her sons, as they advanced in years, soon brought them into notice, and finally procured them high and honorable stations in society.

From Chambers' Journal.

TWO DUMB SATIRISTS.

At Rome, of which we have heard so much of late, and of which we shall hear so much more before that unhappy papal question be settled—at Rome the descendants of the Junii, of the Gracchi, of the Rienzis, have a peculiar and altogether indigenous way of making known their feelings: they compose pasquinades, that is, lampoons which they attribute to their statue Pasquino, and satiric dialogues supposed to take place between this same Pasquino and a fellow-statue nicknamed Marforio.

Leo X., Clement VII., Paul III., Paul IV., and Gregory XII. all underwent the lash of Pasquino's satire; but it was the famous and terrible Sixtus V. who was most frequently and most justly pasquinaded. His iron stubbornness and brutal severity were the causes of this; he was a strange man for a priest, and Rome groaned under him very much as England did under Henry VIII., and France under Cardinal Richelieu.

On one occasion he had ordered a new fast: Marforio (of whom we shall speak presently) hereupon asked Pasquino in honor of what saint this edict had been published. "It is in honor of the new tax," answered Pasquino; the Romans having no longer anything to eat, the supreme council wishes to force them to make a virtue of necessity."

Sixtus V.—a sort of Baron Haussmann in his way—had a great mania for building; and of all the things he most loved to build, the first were fountains. It was he who erected the fountain of Monte Cavallo and the Fontana Felice. Pasquino parodied the inscription, "Pontifex maximus," placed upon all these constructions, and made of it "Fontifex maximus" (great builder of fountains.)

A soldier of the Swiss papal guard having once, in the Cathedral of St. Peter, struck a Spanish nobleman with his halberd, the latter in indignation returned the blow with his stick, but so roughly that the Swiss died of the wound the same morning. The pope at once sent to the governor of Rome, and told him that he expected to see justice done that very afternoon, "before I sit down to dinner," he added, "and I intend dining early." The Spanish ambassador and four cardinals shortly after arrived at the Vatican to sue for the pardon of the culprit on the ground of the provocation he had received; but Sixtus was inflexible. "Grant at least, Holy Father," then asked the ambassador, "that the unhappy man be beheaded and not hanged, for he is of gentle blood." "He shall be hanged, he shall be hanged," cried the pope; "but if the shame of this mode of death can in any way be alleviated by my attendance at the execution, the man shall die in my presence." The gibbet was accordingly erected in front of the pontifical windows. Sixtus V. came out upon the balcony, witnessed without wincing the whole of the revolting scene; and when it was over, said grimly to his attendants: "And now bring me to eat; this act of justice has given me an appetite."

The next day Marforio asked of Pasquino whither he was hurrying, thus loaded with gibbets, wheels, whips, and axes. "O, it's nothing," answered Pasquino; "I am only carrying a stew to stimulate the Holy Father's appetite."

Once, however, Pasquino gave praise to this terrific pope, and under the following circumstances:

Sixtus, as one may remember, belonged to the order of Cordeliers. A chapter of the order having been convoked during his reign, he consented to appear at it; eat in the convent refectory, and drank with his old companions to the health of their patron, St. Francis. When the chapter was over Sixtus ordered that, two days after, the monks should come to the Vatican to kiss his feet, and each ask him a favor. At this the joy of the Cordeliers was delirious; for the next forty-eight hours they were beside themselves; the other monastic orders, apprised of what was to take place, growled with jealousy; and even the cardinals themselves, who were not overloaded with papal favors, bit their lips with envy, and felt by no means disposed to laugh, when Pasquino observed that hitherto he had aspired to be a cardinal, but that now he should go and order the cowl of a Cordelier.

On the appointed day Sixtus V. appeared on his throne with his tiara upon his head, and surrounded by a dense crowd of cardinals and courtiers, all burning to see the strange sight of a distribution of six hundred favors. For there were six hundred monks, and all came up one after another, each as he passed kissing the pontiff's foot, and then uttering his request. One asked for two cells in his convent, and for emancipation from monastic regulations; others asked for pensions, abbeys, bishoprics, and even cardinals' hats. A great many merely requested permission to leave the convent; and a few quarrelsome and vindictive monks asked for bulls of excommunication against their personal enemies. Not one of the six hundred but petitioned to some selfish end, until at last—solitary exception—there came an old friar who reminded the pope that the monastery had often suffered from drought of water, and begged him in consequence to erect a fountain there. Profoundly disgusted with them all, Sixtus then called them back, and after a speech of bitter invective against the folly and worldliness of their wishes, sent them individually and collectively about their business. To the old friar alone he spoke with benevolence: "You, my friend," he said, "you have thought of your brothers whilst thinking of yourself; you shall have your fountain, and you shall also have a benefice which has just become vacant in one of the city churches." Pasquino, delighted, remarked that nothing was so pleasing to him as to see six hundred foxes caught in the same trap.

Sixtus, brutal as he usually was, yet put up as a rule with the jokes and criticisms of Pasquino. On one occasion only did he seek revenge. He had a sister, whom he dearly loved, named Camilla Peretti; but amongst other loose things that were said of her it was reported that, at the time when her brother had been a poor monk, she had washed linen to earn her living. One morning Pasquino appeared with a dirty shirt on. "Hollo!" exclaimed Marforio; "why such unclean linen, Pasquino?" "I have no laundress," was the piteous answer, "ever since the pope has made a princess of mine." After useless endeavors to discover the author of this pitiless joke Sixtus offered a thousand crowns and a promise that the culprit's life would be spared if he would give himself up at once. Tempted out of prudence by the magnitude of the reward, the author revealed himself. "You shall not be hanged," said the pope to him in fury, "and you shall have your reward too; but we are going to pluck out your tongue, and to cut off your hands, to teach you how to moderate yourself for the future"—and this inhuman order was executed.

It would be impossible to relate the whole or even the principal of Pasquino's innumerable concetti; for every day and every hour something new was written, carved, or chalked upon his pedestal. If political topics failed, there were always social scandals and gossipings in plenty; and it was not only the rich and powerful who dreaded his sting. Adrian VI. at last conceived the idea of destroying this dumb but talkative critic. "What!" he cried, "we know well enough how to gag men in this city, and shall we find no means of silencing a block of marble?" And he gave orders to throw Pasquino into the Tiber; but a courtier induced him to change his mind by this adroit reflection, that if Pasquino were destroyed another would soon take his place, his name, and his reputation for waggery. "One can kill flesh, your holiness, but not stone," he added; and so Pasquino was spared. For a time, however, he became more prudent, and, for a while, even silent; but on being asked the reason of this by Marforio, he replied shrewdly, "It is useless to criticise just now, for all the doings of our pope are so bad that they may be said to be self-satires enough in themselves."

A few words now about Marforio. Like his compeer Pasquino, he has only his trunk, and archæologists still wonder whether he was meant for a Jupiter, a Neptune, an Oceanus, a Vertumnus, or for the Rhine, the Danube, the Tigris or the Tiber. His name of Marforio comes from his having been found near the Forum of Mars. It was in the sixteenth century that he was discovered close by the arch of Septimus Severus, whilst excavations were being made in the Forum.

As a work of art Marforio is scarcely inferior to Pasquino. In support of this assertion one may quote the opinion of Vasari, the celebrated artist and writer, who says that Marforio can rival the statues of the Tiber and the Nile at the Belvedere, as also those of the well known "giants" on the Monte Cavallo. Frederico Zuccaro also says that Marforio is one of the finest models of sculptural perfection.

The dialogues between Marforio and Pasquino had a much greater influence than one might suppose upon the conduct of the nobles and prelates of Rome. If the fear of satire did not positively prevent them from acting ill, it at all events made them careful to keep a veil upon their misdoings. In a book of Monsignor Sabba di Castiglione, published in the last century, and entitled "Manual of Gentlemanlike Virtues," as we should say—it is written: "Try and be virtuous, O noblemen, in order to stop the tongues of those two sharp old Romans, come originally from Carrara—Master Pasquino and Master Marforio."

In 1808, when the French troops entered Rome to garrison it, after the imprisonment by Napoleon of Pius VII., Pasquino asked Marforio whether the French were not a herd of brigands. On the next day Marforio answered: "Buonaparte" (the better part of them—buona parte.)

When the Garibaldians invaded the Papal States Pasquino remarked that Cardinal Antonelli was packing up his trunks, and asked whether it was that he was afraid of being shot. "No," replied Marforio, "but he is in a blue fright of Menotti"—Menotti is the name of Garibaldi's son, but it also means fetters or handcuffs, in Italian.

A New Method of Extinguishing Fires.

A new method of extinguishing fires, recently patented by Messrs. Lapham & Clark, of Boston, by the application of carbonic acid gas projected from a portable fire-engine, was lately tested upon the Battery in New York city. About fifty tar-barrels, each of which contained a quantity of shavings saturated with kerosene oil, were ignited, and when at the highest point of combustion a stream from a quarter-inch nozzle was turned upon the burning pile, and in the space of about fifty seconds the fire was completely subdued. A second fire was then made, which was extinguished with equal facility. At the third trial the debris was piled together and ignited; when enveloped in flames pure water was thrown on it from the engine, but with little effect. The experiments were conducted by Gen. Shaler, Chief-engineer Kingsland, of the Metropolitan Fire-Department, assisted by the Board of Fire Commissioners and others interested. Many members of the fire insurance companies were present and expressed their satisfaction at the efficacy of the apparatus and its results.

In appearance the engine is about the size of a common garden-engine, and is worked much in the same manner, and may be operated by two men, one at each end of the brakes. The tank forming the body of the engine is divided into two portions, and each portion contains an upright cylinder about 2½ inches diameter, and of 5 inches stroke; these cylinders act directly upon an air chamber which is placed between them. From this air-chamber a hose leads to whatever place desired. In the top of each tank there is a shallow sieve, in one of which was placed tartaric acid, and in the other bicarbonate of soda; or other materials producing carbonic acid gas, when mingled together, may be used instead. Water was poured into the sieves and, dissolving and carrying with it a portion of the chemicals, was received in the tank below; the object of the sieves being apparently to retain any lumps that might be among the bicarbonate or the acid. The pump pistons are connected by rods to the beam of the engine, and when in action both cylinders act together to supply the air-chamber, and the union of the two liquids there produces an effervescence and forms carbonic acid gas, which is projected upon the fire. Canisters of the dry chemicals are attached to the tanks and are ready for instant use when required. The capacity of the two tanks is about a barrel, and the quantity used in the first and second trial was about ten gallons each time.

The efficiency of the engine in subduing fire is entirely dependent upon its capacity to generate a constant supply of carbonic acid gas, the water serving simply as a medium for conveying it directly to the flame. In operation the whole apparatus is very simple and can be, at a trifling expense, adapted to an ordinary garden-engine, but it cannot be as advantageously used as in the machine which is made expressly for the purpose.—American Artisan.

To Roast a Pig.—Rub the inside of the pig with pepper and salt, and fill the body with a stuffing of bread, butter, parsley, sage, and thyme, softened with a little hot water and beaten yolk of egg, and sew it up with a strong thread. Put the pig on the spit, first flouring the skin, that it may be crisp. Put a pint and a half of water into the dripping-pan, a spoonful of lard, and a little salt, and baste the pig frequently with this, and turn often, so that every part will be well done. When the skin begins to get stiff, grease it with butter or lard, and baste it no more after this or it will blister. A pig will require from three to four hours to roast. Chop up the heart and liver, previously boiled in water, and add to the gravy in the dripping-pan, with salt, thyme, and brown flour and water as a thickening. Apple-sauce, cold slaw, and cranberries are the usual accompaniments of a roast pig.

SERVING GOD BY PROXY.

A visitor in a church in London, a short time since, was surprised to hear a long tenor solo, rendered by a "professional gentleman," followed by another from a young lady, standing on a stool or hassock for the better elevation of her person. The music having taken up so much time, the clergyman informed his congregation that he would read only a portion of his sermon, but would have it all printed.

This case furnishes a somewhat exaggerated illustration of certain tendencies which are manifesting themselves in more than one branch of the church of Christ. The great end of the gospel is being overlooked; and greater effort is made to please the people than to save them. Christ died for sinners, but the preachers go into the pulpit to entertain them. He is commissioned to preach, but instead thereof somebody sings. The message of God may be omitted, the thunders of Sinai may be silenced, the death and passion of the Redeemer may be forgotten even in His house, but the music must be heard. Its last note must have ample time to reach, with its most delicate vibration, the refined and cultivated ear of the congregation, who can stay no longer to hear a message from God. They have heard all they desire to hear. It is entertainment they seek, and not salvation. The grand story of the cross has become common-place; the people do not care to hear it, and the preacher, respecting their wishes rather than the command of Him who said: "Therefore, thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me," stops in the midst of his message.

We may perhaps console ourselves in this particular case by the thought that the preacher who has so low a conception of his vocation as to permit it to be elbowed out of the way by any forms whatever, or by music, though its strains were sweeter than the song of the Swedish Nightingale, would, in all probability, present so poor a gospel that the congregation could dispense with it and suffer no loss.

Is not this cold-hearted Christianity creeping into the Methodist church. Where is that congregational singing, for instance, which in other days moved with such power the hearts of the people. We acknowledge the might of music, but the swelling tones of the organ, and the blending harmonies of the most skillful choir that now monopolizes that sublime portion of divine worship, can never gather such crowds, nor stir, with such power, the deep fountains of emotion in the human soul, as those grand strains of melody which once pealed up from the hearts and tongues of Methodist congregations. Why can not our people sing now as in other days? They withhold that praise which God claims from every tongue, and the spirit of praise is departing. Sometimes on the camp-ground we hear those hymns which in other days made our hearts rejoice. A sinner is converted, and while angel tones proclaim it in heaven, Christians beneath, sharing the same joy, burst forth in triumphant notes, worthy of the event. Is it strange that earnest hearted Christians yearn to hear once more those glorious songs in the house of God, and will not be satisfied when, in their place, they hear an echo from the opera, skillfully performed, while the heart of the singer is dead to the love of God.—Texas Christian Advocate.

Hominy Muffins.—Having washed a pint of small hominy through two or three waters, pour boiling water on it, cover and let it soak for several hours. Then put it into a thick sauce-pan with half a pint of boiling water, and let it boil until soft enough to mash; drain it, and mix it well with a pint of white corn meal or wheat flour, a little salt, and a pint and a half of milk, in which two table-spoonfuls of butter have been melted.

When the butter is nearly cold add four table-spoonfuls of yeast, cover it, and set it in a warm place, until very light, with the surface covered with bubbles. Butter some muffin rings, set them on a hot griddle, pour into each a portion of the mixture, and bake them brown on both sides. Send them to table accordingly as they are done, pull them open with your finger and butter them quickly.

The glory of the Lord appears in that cloud which is upon the penitent's sad heart. When it is drenched in tears the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, both "moves on those waters" and breathes life and salvation into them; and He, who is the unction, pours oil into those wounds of the spirit, and we are never nearer heaven than when we are thus prostrate in the lowest dust; and when our "belly cleaveth unto the ground" in humble penitence, then we are at the very throne of grace.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NO. VII.—MIRACLES.

We have already remarked that no miracles were wrought through human instrumentality until the laws of nature had been in operation many centuries, and men had become familiar with them. We may remark, further, that these miracles were wrought on substances and diseases common and well known. Bread, for example, has from the remotest ages been a substance familiar to all, claiming even a very limited degree of civilization. It was never known to increase so that a few loaves would be sufficient to feed thousands. Water was a familiar substance. It was never known suddenly to turn into wine. A river was never known to turn into blood. A rod or staff was a most familiar thing, and had never been known to turn into a serpent. Blindness was a familiar disease, and persons born blind were common. There was never a natural or medical example of one such person being suddenly cured. Now if the miracles had been wrought upon unknown substances, some new chemical discovery, or on some new and strange disease, there might have been ground to suppose that a fraud had been practiced—that the spectators, not being competent judges, had been imposed upon. God, in infinite wisdom, has guarded his attesting miracles from any imputation of this kind.

The miracles were wrought for worthy and important ends—to attest a mission and a message from God—to communicate to men the greatest truths, and to bring them to the realization of the highest good. They were never wrought through caprice, or to subserve mere personal and material aims. Miracles were wrought in the most public manner. If they had been wrought in obscure and inaccessible localities, in the dark, or before but few or interested witnesses, their credibility might well have been doubted. But they were wrought in the streets of cities, nearly all of them, in open day and in the presence of numerous witnesses, many of them strongly prejudiced against those who were the instruments in working these wonders, and eager to find a flaw or make any plausible objection they could. These miracles were of such a permanent character that the witnesses had ample time to assure themselves of their reality if true, or detect the imposture, if such they were. The plagues in Egypt generally lasted several days. The falling of the manna, and the pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night, lasted forty years. Persons that were cured of deafness, blindness and lameness continued in health, and in the same community, for years accustomed to the working of these miracles. Now it is observable that feats of legerdemain and sleight of hand are generally performed in the most rapid manner, so as to escape, as far as may be, the detection which would follow if more time for careful observation were allowed.

The miracles of Scripture are various. If they had been confined to one class of subjects then it might have been alleged that the operators had discovered some secret method of doing that thing; but such is not the fact. A very limited enumeration will show the vast variety of miracles. The sun and moon, the air, the water, the rocks, trees, birds and beasts, blindness, deafness, lameness, the palsy, fever, leprosy, the dead, all these were again and again the objects of miracles.

The miracles of Scripture were numerous. Take, for example, the miracle of the manna. Notice the following circumstances: 1. That it fell but six days in the week. 2. That it fell in such prodigious quantities as to sustain three millions of people—some ninety thousand per day. 3. That there fell a double quantity on the sixth day—enough for a two days' supply. 4. That what was gathered on the first five days of the week stank and bred worms, if kept above one day; that which was gathered on the sixth day kept sweet for two days. 5. That it continued falling while the Israelites remained in the wilderness, but ceased as soon as they came out of it, and got corn to eat in the land of Canaan. These several miracles were repeated every week for forty years. A great many of the miracles of Christ are recorded at large and in detail, but it is said "great multitudes" of the afflicted flocked to him, that could not be cured by human skill, and it is said, "He healed them all." Hundreds and hundreds of all classes of human infirmity, disease and suffering came to Christ, and he miraculously healed them all, never turning one empty away, or saying, Ye have sought my face in vain.

The apostles narrate these miraculous wonders in the most simple and unostentatious way—without flourish or parade, or exclamatory notes of attention. They depend upon the dignity and inherent importance and excellence of what they narrate, esteeming that pure gold needs never to carry a card of introduction or a letter of commendation. Its own intrinsic excellence recommends it to the favor of all. The miracles of Christ were all dignified. There was nothing puerile, nothing absurd. They were all, with perhaps two exceptions, humane and benevolent. The sudden and miraculous withering of the fig tree was meant to be a solemn monition, and the drowning of the swine was punitive, for the raising of swine by the Jews for market was a contraband trade. All his other miracles were meant to alleviate physical, domestic and moral distress. "He went about doing good."

The force of a miracle consists in the fact that it is manifestly a work above human power, and as such accredits to us one who represents and expresses the will of the author and Lord of nature.

Miracles are necessary to clothe a teacher, claiming to come from God, with authority. Without such an investure we may well ask: "By what authority teachest thou?" We are not bound to accept the uninspired teachings of any man only so far as they accord with our reason. We have a right to differ with any finite mind. But when God, the author of our being, speaks, we are bound by all the obligations that bind the creature to the Creator to hear and obey. Philosophers and law-givers can never bind the conscience. God alone possesses that acknowledged right. The necessity for miracles is then apparent. Without them no valid or permanent claim to inspiration can ever be established and maintained. We must feel, as we read the writings of each of the sacred penmen, that "thou art a teacher come from God," or else we shall regard his teachings in the same light that we regard other human productions. BRIDE CAKE.—One pound flour, eight ounces butter, one and a quarter pounds sugar, six ounces candied peel, eight ounces almonds, nine eggs, one pound of currants, one pound of chopped and seeded raisins. Flour, fruit, almonds, and candied peel mix together on a dish, and let them be thoroughly dried. Beat the butter to a cream; add the sugar, then the eggs, having previously beaten them in a basin. After beating the butter, etc., well, add the flour and fruit, and bake four or five hours. The almonds for the top must be prepared as follows: Blanch half a pound of sweet almonds, and beat them in a mortar until very fine, with half pound grated loaf sugar, the white of one egg, and a little rose-water; lay it on the top of the cake when it is warm, and let it set in a very slow oven previous to putting on the icing.

THE PEAR SCALE.—The (English) Journal of Horticulture has recently given a remedy for the pear scale, which we give as we find it. It is simply to paint over the affected trees with boiled linseed oil, in early spring, just before the buds expand, and consequently just before the scale insect begins to multiply. Where the scale is very bad the trees may as well die of the remedy as of the disease. Now, mind that we do not indorse or recommend this treatment, but if any one has a scaly pear tree he can try anything that offers a prospect of cure.—American Agriculturist.

Harpersville Circuit, Montgomery Conference.

FEBRUARY 26, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Being confined to my room by sickness, and cut off for a while from active labors, I employ a part of my time in writing. I here submit a few items for the ADVOCATE, which you may publish if they are worthy of a place in your excellent paper.

Through the kindness of our people at Columbiana I have been supplied with a comfortable home in their pleasant village, where I am now residing. This arrangement was completed before our last Conference. If the bishop had chosen to send me to another work somebody would have been disappointed. But good luck was on my side, and I was returned to this circuit the second year. It is needless to say Bishop Wightman has my sincere thanks.

Columbiana affords more advantages for the pastor's family than Harpersville, the place where the parsonage was located last year. Here we are more directly on the line of travel, and have better opportunities of seeing the preachers as they pass from point to point. The church and Sunday school are near us, and we can attend every meeting without walking ourselves out of breath, or sticking in the mud on rainy days. Brother Wilson, our presiding elder, and other good ministers of the gospel, live here. Monthly meetings are held by the Presbyterian and Baptist denominations. There is also a good school, conducted by Mr. McLain. Were it not for sin, a little fever and ague, some rheumatism, and scarcity of money, we might be perfectly happy.

Unfortunately the church has lost one of its main pillars by the removal of Rev. R. Phillips. He has gone to Mississippi. Though feeble in body from the infirmities of age, he was strong in faith and moral influence. His work in the pulpit and school room has produced effects which will continue longer than a life time. We miss him here.

The winter has been severe.—Sleet, snow and rain have taught us to love our firesides, and to value thick boots and overcoats. On the night of the 28th of January there was a most beautiful snow. It fell all night on frozen ground, covering the earth to a depth of five inches. The next morning presented a scene of dazzling brightness. On every object in sight there was a covering of light. The young cedars and slender pines bowed gracefully under their snowy burdens. They seemed to be silently worshiping the hand which had thrown the white robes over their garments of green.

We have had no particular signs of religious improvement in the church during the winter, but we have reasons for believing that as the spring opens and the chances for going to meeting become more favorable there will be a revival of religion. Bad houses of worship are great drawbacks to religious prosperity in this country. A shivering congregation is hard to warm up. Such an audience receives only one word with delight—the "amen."

The crop of last year is sufficient to sustain life without inconvenience. Everybody has enough bread, and, as an old preacher said, "a little meat once and a while, seemingly as it were."

The young crops of small grain are growing rapidly, and promise abundant harvests. Brother Wilson has fine oats and wheat growing. He has been engaged ever since Conference in reconstructing fences and putting his farm in a condition of defence against lawless animals, so that his mind may be free from anxiety about his substance while away on the district. I trust I shall be able to do something for the ADVOCATE this year. But few of our people take the church papers, and it is difficult to inspire them with a love of reading. The want of money, high taxes, quarterage claims, etc., are excuses hard to get over.—More religion and more money will, I think, enable me to send you a respectable number of names.

Wishing you happiness and success in every field of operation, I remain

Your's in Christ,

D. S. MCDONALD.

RITUALISM.—The Dean of Carlisle preached a sermon in the cathedral of that city recently on Ritualism. It was a sequel to a discourse upon the same subject delivered in the cathedral on the previous Sunday. At the close of his argument the dean said if he had believed, with some fond and foolish people, that the divisions of the Church of England were only a slight squabble about a little decoration, about a little more music, a little more singing, a little more dress, he should consider it as "hay, straw, and stubble," not worthy of consideration, but he believed in the depths of his heart this thing meant much more. He believed the nature of it was deep-seated in the artifices of Satan, in the mysteries of iniquity and corruption. He would not say it was a work of the Church of Rome, but of the dark ages; and whether it be a part of the whole—every fragment of drapery, every unusual bowing and crossing of the hands, the taking of the Lord's Supper in the hollow of the hand, or bowing to the altar—it was downright idolatry. Why would a man going down the steps of the communion table bow to the table? He must believe there was something there. What was it? It was because he believed the elements of bread and wine had been turned into the body and blood of Christ; it was because he thought a sacrifice had been offered there. He believed that in all these things, which appeared to some childish, there was a certain thrusting out of a bud, which would lead by and by to a flower and fruit; and the seeds of superstition and darkness must be the result. These men were "causing division among us." Avoid them! Don't go near them, don't go out of curiosity to see their bedizened altars and their gorgeous vestments. It is all superstition and idolatry, the whole of it. He condemned no man individually; but inasmuch as those who represented that system reviled Protestantism—told them that their Protestant martyrs were merely political offenders—laughed at the Protestantism by virtue of which Victoria sits upon the throne, and by virtue of which he occupied that pulpit—he solemnly declared he believed Ritualism to be a deep-seated heresy, proving itself to be so by its stretching out its hands to go to its mother Rome, and to its sister the Grecian Church, while it turned away from Protestantism. Protestantism was a protest against the very thing that Ritualists wished to introduce. They asked for liberty: liberty to do what? Liberty to introduce popery into the Church of England. They should have no such liberty so far as all honest ministers of Christ could oppose them, by fair argument in open court, and by every means which God had given them. He had been watching them for these forty years, he had never ceased to do so, and with his dying breath he should do so still.—Christian Times.

AN INTERVIEW WITH KING THEODORE.—"Doffing my hat and shoes, leaving the latter on the threshold, I made a bold advance into the interior of the hut; but great was my surprise when, instead of finding anywhere the outward paraphernalia of Oriental royalty I beheld the famous Theodore, the renowned warrior and absolute lord of a great dominion, dressed in his cotton shirt and trousers, and these not over clean, seated, not on a throne, but on a low divan, raised about a foot from the ground. Thinking at first that it could not be the king himself who was seated before me, the profound bow with which I entered was rather uncertainly directed. His request by indication that I would be seated reassured me, and doubling my legs up in the Oriental manner, I squatted down among the rest. We were now well supplied with arracky and tedge (honey wine) in the drinking line, as well as with a plain breakfast of teff bread and stewed meat, to satisfy the more solid demands of hunger. In the meanwhile the king, who, supping arrack all the time, chatted away very pleasantly in Amharic with the missionaries, plying them with questions in theology, or discussing their recent successes in mortar-making. His appearance was that of a man about forty-five, of middling stature, and possessed of a well knit but not over-powerful frame, conveying more the idea of being tough and wiry than of strong physical developments. His complexion is dark, approaching to black, but he has nothing of the negro about him. His features are altogether those of an European. His head is well formed, and his hair is arranged in large plaits extending back from the forehead. The forehead is high, and tends to be prominent. His eye is black, full of fire, quick and piercing. His nose has a little of the Roman about it, being slightly arched and pointed. His mouth is perfect, and the smile, which during the conversation continually played upon it, was exceedingly agreeable, I may say fascinating. He has very little moustache or beard. His manner was peculiarly pleasant, gracious, and even polite, and his general expression, even when his features were at rest, was one of intelligence and benevolence. On the whole, the physiognomist would find no trace of fierce passion except in the lightning glance of his eyes. I watched for the keen shot of light coming from them at times, and reflected upon what he could be capable of, but they did not strike me as treacherous eyes. I felt that he could act savagely under irritation."

A DAY WITHOUT A NIGHT.

W. W. Thomas, late United States consul at Gothenburg, in a letter from Norway, thus describes that far northern country, and one of its particular phenomena:

"Imagine a high table-land rising three thousand to six thousand feet sheer above the sea—one vast rock, bleak and barren, covered with snow, swept with rain, frozen in winter, sodden in summer—the home of a few reindeer and Lapps, and you have Norway proper, nine-tenths of the Norway that is shown on the map. But the rock is not whole; it is cracked apart here and there, and fissures show like slender veins over the country. The sides of these ravines are steep as the cleft left by an ax, and their depths are always filled by a foaming brook or river tumbling along from the drenched table-land above to the sea. I have looked from the bottom of one of these valleys and seen the perpendicular rock rise like a strip of blue ribbon. Wherever in these dales there lies a bit of earth 'twixt rock and river, there the Norwegian peasant has built his cot; and it is on such bits of earth that inhabited Norway is situated, and here lives its 1,200,000 people. The land just around his door gives the Norwegian potatoes, rye, barley, and oats; his cattle climb the steeps above for every stray blade; for the rest he depends upon the sea and river. Were it not for the excellent fisheries along this northern shore Norway would be uninhabitable.

"One night in July, 1865, Hon. H. Campbell, late minister of Stockholm, the two Messrs. Buckley, of Birmingham, and myself, landed on the shore of a northern fiord in latitude sixty degrees north. We ascended a cliff which rose 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. It was late, but still sunlight. The Arctic ocean stretched away in silent vastness at our feet. The sound of its waves scarcely reached our airy look-out. Away in the north the huge old sun swung along the horizon, like the slow beat of the pendulum in the tall clock in our grandfather's parlor corner. We all stood silent, looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve, midnight, the full round orb hung triumphantly above the wave—a bridge of gold running due north spanned the waters between us and him. There he shone in silent majesty which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said. Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunset and sunrise you ever saw, and its beauties will pale before the most gorgeous coloring which now lit up ocean, heaven, and mountain. In half an hour the sun had swung up perceptibly on its beat, the colors changed to those of the morning; a fresh breeze rippled over the fiord, one songster after another piped up in the grove behind us—we had slid into another day."

TO ROAST A TURKEY.—Wash the turkey very clean, and let it lie in weak salt and water over night. When ready to put to roast rub it dry in the inside, and sprinkle in a little pepper. Make a stuffing of two-thirds wheat bread and one-third corn bread, rubbed fine, and softened with butter and beaten yelk of egg, and seasoned with salt, pepper, parsley and celery. Mix the stuffing well together, and fill the turkey. Rub the breast of the turkey with salt, pepper and butter. Have water and lard in your dripping-pan, and baste often. It will require three hours to roast. Pea fowl and Guinea fowl are roasted and dressed in the same way. Cranberry-sauce is almost indispensable with this dish. Celery, too, usually accompanies it.

CONVERSION OF MICK HEALY.

The bishop of Cork, Ireland, gives the following account of the conversion and happy death of Mick Healy, an Irish peasant of the Roman Catholic church:

'Well, Mick, why don't you now pray to the Virgin Mary?'

'Because it is not in the Book,* your reverence.'

'To whom only should you pray, Mick?'

'To God only, your reverence.'

'Why don't you now confess your sins to Peter and Paul, Mick?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Mick, why don't you call the Virgin Mary 'Refuge of sinners, your life, your hope, your advocate, and the gate of heaven,' as Roman Catholics do?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Who is the refuge of sinners, your life, your hope, and your advocate, Mick?'

'The Lord Jesus, your reverence.'

'How do you know, Mick?'

'Because it is in the Book, your reverence.'

'Why, Mick, don't you worship the host which the priest holds in his hands, as the Roman Catholics do?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Why are you not now satisfied with Latin prayers? why don't you keep the holy water in the house, the blessed clay, and the blessed candles, Mick?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Why don't you believe in purgatory, Mick?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Why don't you believe that the bishop of Rome is the head of the church, and the vicar of Jesus Christ, Mick?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Why don't you believe that fasting, and penance, and giving alms can make satisfaction for your sins, Mick?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Mick, why don't you believe that the Virgin Mary has power in heaven, and that we ought to seek her intercession?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'Mick, why don't you believe, as Roman Catholics do, that the Church of Rome is the mother and mistress of all churches, and that if we don't belong to her we can't be saved?'

'Because it is not in the Book, your reverence.'

'How do you find out what church teaches the truth, Mick?'

'By the Book, your reverence.'

'How do you know that the Church of Rome leads people astray, Mick?'

'By the Book, your reverence.'

Here is an account of the dying scene:

The dying peasant, gathering up all his strength, said, in answer to his son:

'Priest, Micky, trash! mass, trash! litany of the saints, trash! purgatory, trash! praying for the dead, trash! help of the Virgin, trash!'

Then he spoke of Christ and the Spirit. He said, 'Christ was all and everything the sinner could want.' 'I am,' said he, 'a sinner, a great sinner, and Christ is all and everything to me.' 'Roman Catholics will be trying,' said he, 'to get to heaven their way, but they won't be able; there will be a bush in the gap.' This phrase is taken from the language of shepherds, alluding to the difficulty of sheep getting into a field, where the only entrance to it is stopped up by a thorny bush; it is commonly used in Irish to convey the idea of a difficulty that cannot be got over.

'Are you happy, father?' said his son, thinking, perhaps, according to the false teaching of the Church of Rome, that he could not be happy if he died a Protestant.

'Micky, jewel,' said the father, 'no king ever went to his throne so happy as I now am, going to my Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ!'

* Mick Healy called the Bible 'the Book.'

DR. BORING COMING TO GEORGIA.—It will be very gratifying to many of our readers to know that our honored and much-loved friend, Dr. Jesse Boring is, in a few weeks, coming back to Georgia. The Atlanta Intelligencer announces that "Professor Miller has been transferred to the chair of Clinical Medicine in the faculty of Atlanta Medical College, and Professor Jesse Boring, of Galveston, Texas, who, in 1855 and 1856, with eminent success filled the chair of Obstetrics and diseases of women and children in this institution, has been again elected to that position, and will make his home in Atlanta before the opening lectures in May." Dr. Boring's old friends, and their "name is legion," will cordially welcome him home.—Southern Christian Advocate.

OUR NEW CATALOGUE.

We are now sending out as fast as we can our new catalogue. It contains not only a list of our new publications, with the prices annexed, but also of many other valuable books which we are prepared to supply. In it will be found complete lists of our Sunday school catalogues, both of our own publication and eclectic. We also furnish with it the late Annual Exhibit of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, that our brethren everywhere may know precisely what we are doing. The proposition we made to all the preachers that they buy sixty dollars' worth of our books for the purposes of relieving the Publishing House of its old indebtedness, with a list of the names that have accepted the proposition, together with an appeal to the church, is also contained in it. Any preacher who may not receive the catalogue in a few days will please notify us, as the printed appointments do not always give us the preacher's post office.

OUR SPIRITUALITY.

Those who love Jerusalem, only less than they love God, are concerned for the spiritual life of the church. The form of godliness may exist without the power, and be held strenuously, whilst the power is denied. Churches grow from other forces than the divine life within them; and after this life is enfeebled or nearly extinct, they often continue to expand in numbers. They build larger and finer church edifices, wealth is devoted lavishly, and the outward and visible signs of prosperity are greater than before.

In zeal we find that spirituality is no gauge. Nowhere do we see greater activity and greater sacrifice than where the work of the Spirit in the heart is but little considered, if not altogether unknown. The devotion of bigotry and superstition shames the inertness of those who pretend to a better knowledge, and a truer experience of the way of salvation. These are facts which observation and history continually attest; all outward progress and consuming zeal, where the living fountain is dried up. Spiritual death is not marked by the decay of aggressive force, nor by religious indifference. The love of Christ has ceased to be the constraining principle, but another set of motives has taken its place. Churches that were planted and nourished by the Holy Spirit, and that were developed upon the laws of spiritual life, glide into formalism and error. Their expansion is no longer from the force of the inward spiritual life, but from accretions which the want of it attracts.

There is nothing wonderful nor strange in the influence and attractions of an unspiritual religion. It meets the demand of men for something upon which to build their hopes for eternity, and harmonizes with the stupid instincts of human nature. Salvation by the eye, the ear, the pocket, and by the operation of prelacy and sacraments, is easier than agonizing to enter in at the straight gate. That the kingdom is within us is a truth that men in general do not care to know. The outside symbols are as near as they wish to come to God. There is attraction in a system that saves without inward crucifixion, and requires no struggle of soul. Sentiment and taste, exhibited in worship, such as architecture, music and paintings may embody, will keep up a church, and crowd it with attendants. The same is true of an idea which may possess a whole denomination, though that idea be foreign to the gospel. The churches in the North are an illustration. The political element has obscured and driven out the charities of the Redeemer. They have adjusted every thing and set their sails for the wind that is blowing. Spiritually apostate and dead, they are yet prosperous. Their schools and churches are endowed and built upon a scale of great magnificence, their missionary treasury is full, revivals and increase of membership go on. One kind of life and power has given place to another. The creed of party has usurped the doctrines of the gospel, and those churches are more popular and more prosperous on this account. It is a better religion for the times, and this sort of gospel suits the ear of the multitude.

There is a strong repellant force in spirituality. This will be exhibited in churches, and the more uncorrupt and evangelical they are, the more will they repel. Truth, mixed and perverted, draws many to itself, who have never been moved by the pure gospel. Make the gospel as nearly after man as possible; make it outward, political, material, and man will take to it. A church really spiritual throws off and expels those who are not spiritual. Those who feel the need of some kind of religion, but are unwilling to conform to a high standard of holiness, will go where they can find what they seek. Certain characters and classes were generally unmoved by the preaching of Christ and the apostles. These found in Judaism and paganism what they preferred to the doctrine of the cross. Had Paul compromised in this matter he would have secured many converts who were offended by the doctrine of the cross. One of the safe-guards of our spirituality lies in this tendency to repel. Another is in the expulsive power of the same principle. Just as a vigorous plant or tree, from the vital forces from within, is continually casting off dead and useless matter, so the spiritual life of the church throws off the decayed and dead material which it can neither vitalize nor assimilate. "They went out from us, but they were not of us."

When these processes are suspended there is danger that the powers of life will be overwhelmed and destroyed. The attempt to modify this free and healthful action, by lowering the conditions of admission, or by an attempt to retain members who have no earnest desire for deep personal piety, must end disastrously. And it is doubtful whether there is any real gain in making the accessories of worship factitiously attractive. When the gospel succeeds on its own merits, it is true success; but an interest which is excited by the mere accessories of worship is of doubtful utility. We have been in churches where we have felt that if the fine music, the stately liturgy and the robed prelacy were taken away, there would be nothing left. The soul of religion, the power of godliness, was not there. The maintenance of our spirituality at its highest point is the first consideration. Adaptation to the tastes of the world, and to the standard of worship in other churches, at the expense of this principle, can be no gain. Class meetings and prayer meetings, and the old-time altar exercises, will do more for us than "Sunday services" or operatic music. The golden mean in the external appointments is desirable, and this to be observed with regard to the spiritual life which it excites and expresses. Anything which smothers or extinguishes, in ever so slight a degree, ought to be rejected.

Churches are subject to transition from simplicity and spirituality to elaborate forms. The decay of inward life often impels to seek in these the remedy for a spiritual decline which has actually begun. The reaching after liturgical and artistic expedients is, indeed, a confession of effeteness in spiritual power. Hence the serious omen there is in certain straws which are wafted about us. These indications are more alarming as symptoms than as causes. Greater than all other expedients to enable us to keep ahead of the times, and to hold our position, is the rekindling of the primitive flame. This is the point to which we have come, or to which we may soon arrive, where to exist at all, we must yield to the transition into lifeless make-shifts and popular expedients, or fall back upon the great central idea of a direct and powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost. We hesitate to conclude that our spirituality is generally declining, but the examples in other, as well as in our own family of churches, stand as warnings. Methodism, with the spirit taken out of it, is like the finest wines that have lost their tine; there is nothing so loathsomely flat and dead. Hence our existence depends upon keeping up the unction and freedom of spiritual life, or of passing into other forms of progress and success. The latter will bring us into the valley and shadow of death; whilst the former will put palms of conquest and victory in our hands. If the melody and song of former days is dying out, it may be for want of the spirit which inspired them; and if the liveliness and pathos of our love-feasts and other social meetings are diminishing, it is probably from the same cause. These all were the effusions of that inspiration which quickened us into being as a church. Through them, as well as through the pulpit, the spirituality of the church made itself felt; and it must be by the fresh and continual breathings of this blessed Agent that they can be preserved in their original efficiency. Our spirituality is the talent committed to us, and its preservation and improvement is largely the measure of our accountability as the stewards of God.

CHURCH of ENGLAND OVERTURES.

While the High-church bishops and deacons are warning their flocks against the "sects," the Evangelical bishops and clergy of the Church of England are making formal overtures to the Wesleyans for a reunion. It is unquestionable that many of the leaders of this church are on the way to Rome, and the Evangelical members of it are ready to strengthen themselves by some vital element from without. A convocation was held in York Minster, under the presidency of the Archbishop of York, in February last, which embraced the bishops and clergy of York, Durham, Carlisle, Ripon, Chester, and Manchester. The following resolution was moved by Archdeacon Hamilton:

That, whereas there now exists a very general desire for Christian unity, and the causes which led to the formation of the Wesleyan body as a distinct community are sensibly diminished, it is the opinion of this house that an attempt should be made to effect brotherly reconciliation between the Wesleyan body and the Church of England; and, therefore, with a view of promoting this most desirable object, a committee of this house be appointed to enter into communication with the president of the Wesleyan Conference, and to invite him to procure the nomination of an equal number of that body to meet such committee for the purpose of considering the possibility of a thorough reunion between the Wesleyan community and the Church of England.

This motion was seconded by the Archdeacon of Carlisle and ably supported by the Bishop of Ripon.

After several speeches were made in favor of the resolution, some of the speakers urging that the church had greatly erred in driving the Wesleyans away, the bishop of Ripon rose and stated that while union with the Wesleyans was a consummation greatly to be desired by the Anglican Church, he was satisfied that any effort to bring it about would be in vain. In the present state of the English Church he was convinced that any proposal for union would be rejected by the Wesleyan Conference. The bishop of Carlisle said he concurred in the remarks which had been made by the bishop of Ripon and others. He said that with the greatest pain. No doubt, if the Wesleyans were represented there they might say, "Look to yourselves; see if even upon your episcopal bench there are not serious doctrinal evils which must be removed before we can rejoin you."

The correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate gives an account of the convention. He says that all were not of the same mind with the bishop:

"One looked at the Wesleyans as the representatives of the largest and most fatal schism which the church had known for the last two centuries; he had denounced them from the pulpit as guilty of the worst kind of 'sheep-stealing,' and he believed the teaching of the Wesleyans was doing infinite harm to the progress of spiritual truth. Another was opposed to the 'Wesleyan doctrine of conversion,' and hoped 'such practices would never be introduced into the Church of England,' though he frankly confessed that it would be better to seek for a union with the Wesleyans than with the corrupt and fallen churches of Rome and Greece. In view of these and other uncomplimentary speeches which were made by some of the clergy present, it is not at all surprising that the House refused to go, as one of them not very elegantly expressed it, 'cap in hand,' to ask the Wesleyans to return to their mother church; but it is remarkable that such a discordant body could pass unanimously the following amendment to the motion:

"'That whereas the union of all faithful Christians is earnestly to be desired, and many of the causes which originally led to the separation of the Wesleyans from the Church of England are sensibly diminished, this House would cordially welcome any practical attempt to effect a brotherly reconciliation between the Wesleyan body and the Church of England.'"

Such a proposition for union between the youthful vigor of Methodism and the chronic Old Mother of England, who is hardly able to carry her big prayer book, should be treated as a young itinerant was who married a mother in Israel seventy years old: the brother was dropped.

Jas. A. Gresham, No. 92 Camp street, bookseller and stationer, advertises his excellent, we may say brilliant, stock of scientific, literary, law, medical, school and theological books in this number of the Advocate. There is too much to be said in favor of Mr. G.'s store and enterprise for us to attempt it seriously in any ordinary notice; only this much, he deserves the patronage of the public because of the intrinsic merit of his establishment.

Where to Plant Peach Trees.—After several years' experience and close observation the writer has found that those peach orchards planted upon an elevation, having a height greater than the surrounding lands, produce a crop of fruit each year, while those planted in ravines or depressions, or on level land, usually fail two years out of three. —California Spectator.

Almond Cakes.—Rub two ounces of butter into five ounces of flour and five ounces of powdered lump sugar. Beat an egg with half the sugar; then put it to the other ingredients. Add one ounce of blanched almonds, and a little almond flavor. Roll them in your hand the size of a nutmeg, and sprinkle with fine lump sugar. They should be lightly baked.

THE REVOKEMENT.

General Grant has revoked the order which removed Street Commissioner Baker. Baker had become an unfaithful steward; he wasted the goods of the corporation, and said to its employees, "Take thy bill, and sit down quickly and write"—in truth, he used the unrighteous mammon "wisely," that is, so that when they should take away from him his stewardship he would have neither to dig nor beg. By order of Gen. Hancock, Baker was put out of office; but General Grant now comes in and "commenda" Baker "because he had done wisely;" for the children of this generation are wise.

This restoration to office of this unfaithful office-holder is a very noticeable thing. The Washington Chronicle, the chief organ of the Republican party, displays the order and the fact of Baker's reinstatement at the head of its columns, double leaded. Gen. Grant's oversight and authority extend to the sewers of this city, and reach from the President's Cabinet to the Street Commissioner of New Orleans. By the same bayonets he puts back Mr. Stanton in the War Department and Mr. Baker in the stewardship. This restoring act was necessary to demonstrate the absolute, all-searching power with which the Military Bill has invested the General. It required Baker to demonstrate Grant.

But it occurs to us that the conqueror of Vicksburg and Richmond could not have consented to supervise the offal-ducts of a Southern city without some inward struggle. It was at least a considerable descent from those lofty concerns which are supposed to fill the brain of the chief military man in the government. Then we supposed that tried service would have secured high respect, if not mutual friendship, between officers who stand in the official relation which Gen. Grant and Gen. Hancock bear to each other; and that when it became a question between any officer who stands high in rank and repute and a Mr. Baker, that Mr. Baker would have to make a good, a very good, and a very strong showing to be reinstated in his stewardship against the remonstrance of that officer. And one asks, what is the pressure which has induced this strange determination in Gen. Grant to override the Commander of the Fifth Military District and this immense volume of public opinion? It cannot be gold, for his salary and the patronage of his position offer him all of that his heart can wish. It can only be the offer of the Presidency by the Radical leaders—the nomination upon the condition of an absolute surrender to them upon his part of all his influence and power before the election and after his accession to office. Hence he blindly obeys the direction of the managers of the Radical policy. He consents to force Gen. Hancock out of the command of this district by using Baker. If Gen. Hancock remains here the Radicals will be defeated in Louisiana and Texas. We do hope that the President will not relieve him, and that the General himself will consent to sympathise with the South, and to share the injustice which she is now receiving at the hands of a successful and despotic party. He will find it to be the shortest road ever yet discovered to enviable fame and position. He already has the favor of the majority of the people of the North; now he can secure the undivided admiration of the people of the South. The Washington Chronicle and the impeachment Jacobins are quite sure of winning this strong position by the Baker movement; they therefore emblazon it before the public. But as Mr. Stanton did not insist upon the imprisonment of Mr. Thomas, we hope that Gen. Hancock will consider the difficulties of General Grant's situation, and will not insist upon being relieved.

As this Street Commissioner business indicates that Gen. Grant has been fully accepted by the Radical leaders as their candidate, it also demonstrates that a death-blow has been given to the aspirations of the Chief Justice. It is no easy matter to shelve such a man as Mr. Chase at any time; one whose services as Secretary of the Treasury did more to secure victory to the Federal cause than its armies in the field. And we doubt not that until a very late period he was the choice of the party. But recent Democratic victories have so alarmed it that things must be precipitated, and the bargain closed with the General; the War office must be secured, and the Executive department must be wrested out of the hands of President Johnson. Whether this vital necessity will be considered a sufficient apology to Mr. Chase for leaving him out in the cold we can discover by watching the course of the Chief Justice in the impeachment trial. We hope that the contending ambition of unscrupulous men will be overruled by Divine Providence to the triumph of the principles of law and justice.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

The Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church, South, met at the Central Church in this city, on Wednesday, the 4th instant, Bishop Doggett presiding. The Rev. J. S. Martin was elected secretary, and Rev. James E. Armstrong and Rev. W. G. Coe were chosen assistant secretaries.

Bishop Doggett addressed the Conference in a speech of rare excellence, pathos and power. We regret our inability to furnish a full report of the bishop's remarks. He congratulated the Conference upon meeting once more in Baltimore, the cradle of American Methodism, and where the church of our fathers had won her earliest and grandest achievements. The allusion to the peculiar trials through which the Southern Church had been called to pass produced a strong impression. In the midst of it all the Church had maintained its purity and vigor, and to-day presented a grander and sublimer spectacle than ever before. The Southern Church is a martyr Church—a martyr to poverty and to persecution from a quarter from which it should never have come—from members of our own household, who had themselves dissolved the bond which had bound us together. Our success, under the circumstances, had no parallel in the history of American Methodism.

About two hundred members are in attendance. For the first time in the history of the Baltimore Conference the lay element is recognized, and a number of the most intelligent gentlemen from Maryland and Virginia occupy seats as lay delegates.

An interesting feature of the occasion is found in the fact that an unusually large number of distinguished ministers from other Conferences are in attendance. Bishop Early, of Virginia; Bishop Wightman, of Charlestown, S. C.; Dr. A. L. P. Green and Dr. McFerrin, of Nashville; Dr. Wiley and Rev. Mr. Cunnyngham, of the Holston Conference; Dr. Head and Rev. Mr. Peterson, of Richmond, Va.; Rev. R. A. Holland, of Kentucky, and others.

In our next we will give a more extended report of the proceedings of the Conference.—Episcopal Methodist.

The Clarksville Chronicle, of the 7th inst., says of Bishop Marvin: This distinguished divine preached in the M. E. Church, of this city, last Sunday morning and evening, to very large congregations. The sacrament was administered, a greater portion of the audience participating. He also preached Monday and Tuesday nights. The bishop is an eloquent, logical and powerful pulpit orator.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Mary Booker, on the 25th of February, 1868, by Rev. W. E. Ballard, Mr. Lionel D. Kent to Miss Mellie L. Booker, all of East Feliciana parish, Louisiana.

By the same, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. D. Barfield, Dr. J. H. Phores, of Wilkinson county, Mississippi, to Miss Emily E. Barfield, of East Feliciana parish, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

Henrietta M., daughter of the Rev. George Stewart, was born August 19, 1836, and died December 31, 1867, at Summerville, Lee county, Alabama.

She was trained in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and in early life professed religion, and joined the Methodist Church. She was married to the Rev. B. S. Williams, of the Alabama Conference, March 24, 1859. Brother W. was a diligent, laborious, and devoted minister of the gospel. Sister W. was to him a help-mate indeed in his great work. With him she submitted to the sacrifices, bore the crosses, and endured the trials of the itinerant life. Those among whom their lot was cast will testify to her consecration of heart and life to the work of doing good.

A spell of sickness, the first year of her married life, made strong inroads on her naturally delicate constitution. In 1863, after a lingering illness, Brother W. died. Her health grew worse and worse, until death came to her relief. She turned away from her husband's grave, to return, after a few years of suffering to lie down by his side to await the resurrection.

Sister W. had qualities of mind and heart which made her an ornament of the Christian life. Her views of duty were clear. She understood the principles of our holy Christianity, and could see the rules of these principles in their application to the various stations and relations of life. She was a safe counsellor. She studied the word of God as "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction," etc., and to its teachings she would appeal for the decision of all questions of duty. She had great fixedness of purpose—no wavering, no turning to the right or to the left. To please God was her aim—to serve him her delight. Her earnestness of soul manifested itself in the great interest with which she regarded the progress of the kingdom of God. She sought to understand the work, and was in sympathy with the workmen in the vineyard of the Lord. The invisible world was a reality to her, and her faith was its substance and evidence. Her mouth was filled with thanksgiving and praise. No complaints against the providence of God were uttered by her. She believed that "He doeth all things well."

Perhaps nothing tries the faith of a mother more in a dying hour than to know that she is to leave her children orphans in a cold world. What confidence in God is that which enabled her to commit them into His hand, assured that He will be a father to them! Sister W. left her two little children in the school of God, and to Him intrusted their training for usefulness and heaven. She bore her sickness with Christian fortitude. In pain and suffering she quietly prepared for her change. She frequently spoke of death, and always with calmness. In the final conflict she entered not the battle with a shout, as one anxious for the fight, but stood patiently and firmly against the advancing foe, able to say: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day." Her end was peace. W. M. MOTLEY.

EDWARD D. ROBINSON, son of M. Robinson, of this city, after a lingering illness, died on the 10th ult., in the 22d year of his age.

Edward was born on the 17th of August, 1846, dedicated to God in baptism, in the January following, by the writer of this brief notice, who knew him well ever since. He was always a good boy, and grew up to be an estimable young man, free from those pernicious habits that often ruin the youth of the present day. He was pleasant and agreeable to all his associates, which endeared him to many, and which was manifested in their kind attentions to him during his last illness. He was remarkable for his veneration to his seniors, and kindness to those younger than himself. At his country's call, when but a boy at school, and away from home, like other ardent minds, under the pressure of a pure patriotism, he answered to the demand, entered the army as a common soldier, and served with fidelity the remainder of the "bootless struggle." Being of a delicate constitution, and exposed to much suffering and hardship, he contracted the disease—consumption—that caused his early death.

During his last illness he made a profession of religion, united with the church, and received the holy communion a few days before his death, and from that time forward to the last moment of life he was happy in God.

The day before his death the family were summoned to his bedside, and on taking leave of them, exhorted each by name to meet him in heaven. Calling for his Bible, which lay near, he read with distinctness and composure the 23d Psalm, seeming to signify thereby his mission was ended, and expressed himself ready to go at the bidding of God. The next morning his happy spirit, without a struggle or a groan, took its flight to heaven, exchanging the society of a bereaved and sorrowing circle for that of angels and God. What a consolation to the heart-stricken parents! What a warning to those of that deeply afflicted family who are yet living without God! May the Lord sanctify this sad event to their good, so that the vows and promises of that solemn hour may never be forgotten.

Died, near Macon, Mississippi, January 18, 1868, Mrs. E. PRATT, aged 42 years.

The deceased was born in the city of Tuscaloosa, and was for years a consistent member of the M. E. Church South. Her death was a triumph, and her last words were those of solemn and affectionate counsel to husband, children and friends. Being particularly kind and attentive to the wants of God's servants around her, ministers of all denominations found a genial and welcome retreat amid the hospitalities of her home.

She was indeed always ready for "every good word and work," and now she "sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and her works do follow her." J. B.

Landreth's Warranted Garden Seeds.

PRIVATE FAMILIES WHO AIM to raise vegetables of the best quality only need run to be reminded that "figs do not grow on thistles," nor that from good seed alone can good vegetables be obtained.

Seeds may, indeed, grow freely enough, but unless they prove good in every respect it were better they had not grown at all. The seeds offered by us being mainly the produce of Bloomsdale, raised under our own personal supervision, with the aid of years of practical experience, we are enabled to speak with entire confidence as to their quality, and of the reasonable probability of satisfactory results.

☞ We have but few "Novelties" to offer. Our experience, obtained at some cost, is that out of the multitude of that class of vegetables advertised for sale, in most cases the good are not new, and the new are not good. Sensible, staple, well-known sorts are in the main the most reliable.

Purchasers who do not reside within ready access of the city, nor near merchants or druggists who vend our seeds, can be supplied by mail, postpaid. Priced Catalogues, for family use, with the Rural Register for 1868 (abounding in useful hints) will be mailed without charge, to all who apply enclosing a three cent stamp. DAVID LANDRETH & SON,

A QUESTION

and that includes

You, Reader!

LOOK AT THESE FIGURES!

2,860	In One Day	that is,
1,908	In One Day
2,164	In One Day
1,707	In One Day
2,039	In One Day
1,618	In One Day	21,312
2,017	In One Day
1,712	In One Day	In only 10 Days!
1,931	In One Day
2,676	In One Day
&c., &c., &c., &c.

EXPLANATION.

The above figures give the exact number of Subscribers received per day, for ten days past, by the publishers of the American Agriculturist, and the work has gone on in the same ratio for a long time. The circulation went up to 150,000 last year, and the subscriptions so far this year are very largely in excess of that or any previous year!

What Does it Mean?

Why, simply this, that the former readers, who have tried and proved the Agriculturist, are so convinced of its great value that they not only continue taking it for themselves, but induce their friends and neighbors to take it also.—Could there be any better evidence of its real value?

An Edition of 159,000

copies was required in 1867. At the rate of increase for a month past the subscription list of the American Agriculturist for 1868 will reach 200,000 to 250,000.

1,000,000 Copies,

at least, and probably 3,000,000 copies, would be wanted this year if everybody should take the Agriculturist who would be profited by its perusal, ten times the small cost.

The Truth Is,

nowhere else can you get so much real value for so little money as you find in the American Agriculturist—so much for yourself—so much for your wife—so much for your children—whether you live in the city, or in a village, or in the country—whether you be farmer, or gardener, or mechanic, or merchant, or minister, or lawyer, or whatever be your pursuit.

Of Engravings,

the Agriculturist contains a large number (350 to 400 in each volume,) the most beautiful and instructive published in any journal in this or any other country. The cost of the engravings alone exceeds Ten Thousand Dollars each year. They are finely executed, beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive. The engravings are alone worth a great many times the subscription price of the paper.

Of Original Information,

For the HOUSEHOLD,
For the CHILDREN,
For the ORCHARD,
For the GARDEN,
For the FARM,
&c., &c.,

the Agriculturist is packed brim-full. It is not a cheaply-gathered, scissors-and-paste-make-up of a paper, but the publishers employ a large force of the most intelligent and practical first-class men to be found in the country. These all devote their time and energy to gathering from every possible source just such information as the people need. It is their ambition and pride to print no line that is unreliable, and to condense the greatest possible amount of useful information into the least possible space. That they succeed in doing this is fully proved by the immense number of persons that continue year after year to take and read the American Agriculturist. It has now entered upon its Twenty-seventh year, and enjoys a circulation probably exceeding the combined circulation of all other rural periodicals, not only in this country, but in the world!

Reader,

You are invited to TRY the American Agriculturist for 1868. You will find it to pay, and pay well. It costs but $1 50 for the whole year, or four copies for $5. Its immense circulation divides the cost of editing, engravings, type setting, office expenses, etc., among so many that it can be supplied at this low rate. TRY IT!

PRICE ADVANCED—PAR AND INTEREST.

The Central Pacific Railroad,

THE BEST AND PRINCIPAL PORtion of the NATIONAL TRUNK LINE ACROSS THE CONTINENT, is being rapidly carried forward by an unprecedented working force, and it is reasonably certain that the continuous overland railroad connection from New York to San Francisco will be made in 1870.

The United States Government furnishes, upon a subordinate and contingent lien, half the means for constructing the main stem line; and besides an absolute grant of 12,800 acres of valuable public lands per mile, the Central Pacific Railroad Company have received from California sources donations and concessions worth more than $3,000,000. The available resources of this company are therefore abundant for the purpose, amounting to $77,000,000 on the first 726 miles of the line, including loans secured by a first mortgage upon the whole property, to the same amount only as the United States subsidy bonds.

The results already attained, although under comparatively unfavorable circumstances, afford substantial ground for believing the Central Pacific to be the Most Favored, Productive and Valuable Railroad Enterprise in the Country.

In consequence of the large and rapidly increasing demand, the price of these bonds has been advanced, and the company are now offering for sale a limited amount of their

First Mortgage Six per Cent. Bonds,

Principal and interest payable in gold coin, in sums of $1,000 each, at par, and accrued interest from January 1st, in currency.

These bonds, it is believed, possess the elements of safety, reliability and profit in a greater degree than any other class of corporate securities now offered, and are therefore very desirable for steady investments of surplus capital.

Investors will bear in mind the following advantages:

I. They are the first mortgage on one of the most valuable and productive lines of railroad in the world.

II. The actual earnings from local business in 1867 were more than four times the annual interest engagements.

III. The hard part of the work is now done, and the prospects of rapid completion are favorable.

IV. The company have liberal subsidies, which enable them to prosecute the work with great vigor.

V. The management has been exceedingly prudent and frugal.

VI. There is already a large and growing settlement on the completed and graded line.

VII. The lands promise to be of immense value. 37,638 acres having been already sold.

VIII. Both principal and interest are explicitly made payable in gold coin.

IX. Both the aggregate amount of issue and their standing in Europe will insure for them continued activity and a high rank among standard securities.

At this time they yield nearly

NINE PER CENT. UPON THE INVESTMENT.

Holders of Government securities have an opportunity of exchanging them for Central Pacific Bonds, bearing an equal rate of interest, with the principal abundantly secured, and of realizing a profit of from ten to fifteen per cent in addition.

Orders sent with the funds through responsible Banks or Express Companies will receive prompt attention. Bonds sent by return Express, to any address in the United States, at our cost. Information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, etc, furnished on application at the

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

OUR PLAY-HOUSES.

BY FELICIA H. ROSS.

Through the fiver-few, that flowered
All along the crooked lanes;
Through the orchards, close embowered,
Through the sunny barley plains,
Where the swarthy reapers, shouting, loaded up the heavy wains.

Through the woods where leaves a-shaking
Sent a murmur on the wind;
And a sparrow, hall-awaking,
Sung the dream that filled his mind:
Looking for our rocky houses, so we left the world behind.

Lo! we found them, set in mosses,
By a softly-humming brook;
Flat and massive, rough with bosses,
Like the shields the giants took
As they sallied forth to battle, while the ground beneath them shook.

Swift we brought, for their adorning,
Mosses from secretest dells,
Poppies wet with dews of morning,
Buttercups and bluest bells,
And we rifled brook and dingle for their brightest stones and shells.

Doors we had, both wide and stately,
Hung with wreaths of ivy green;
Beds of flowers, planted straightly,
With their tiny walks between,
Sloping, terrace after terrace, to the water's crystal sheen.

Never palace floors were muffled
With a carpet soft as ours,
And the breeze, that by us ruffled,
Brought a dash of locust flowers;
While a mocking-bird was singing, singing all the summer hours.

Slowly, o'er the meadow's level,
Lower, redder, dropt the sun;
Then we made a royal revel,
For the wondrous work was done,
Bird, and bee, and saucy chipmunk, we invited every one.

Banquet hall and feast were splendid,
Fire-flies hung on every spray;
But if all the guests attended,
We could never surely say,
For an owl, among the hazels, hooted, and we ran away!

THE GOLDEN RULE.

"Uncle Joseph, Uncle Joseph, please tell us what makes every one like you so well?"

This was asked by some half dozen bright eyed, eager-looking little fellows, who clustered around a white-haired old man, with a very pleasant face. Indeed, Father Time had left his marks there deep and strong; but it was a very true and clear letter of praise, that those who ran might read.

Uncle Joseph answered, "Why, boys, what has come over you to ask me such a question as that?"

One little boy answered, "Well, uncle, I'll tell you. We were talking with father about you, and I asked him what made everybody like you so well; and he told us to come to you; he thought you would tell us the secret. Now please do."

Then the old man said—

"Well, boys, this is the secret: I have always tried to do by others as I would wish others to do by me. This is a good rule and very easy to understand, and those who practice it cannot be very far out of the way. I was always a quiet, thoughtful boy, and perhaps for that reason was more inclined to think of others than some of these wide-awake little fellows are.

"But look here, boys, you come and sit with me under the shade of this beautiful elm tree, and I will tell you what happened to me when I was quite a young man, which I think has made a life-long impression upon me.

"Well, to begin, as the story-tellers say, when I was a young man I lived far away from here, in a hilly country, and very near where I lived there was what is called a mountain gorge, which was some ten feet wide. Now to get on the opposite side one must travel some four or five miles; so the neighbors concluded to have a bridge built, and each one that crossed pay toll, and in that way to pay for the bridge and keep it in repair. As I lived nearer to the bridge than any one else, they voted that I should be toll-gatherer. This was not a very arduous task, as there was not a very great deal of travel in that region, and very seldom any one wished to cross the bridge after ten o'clock at night. O, I must not forget to tell you there was a gate at one end of the bridge which was kept locked at night, and no one could cross without they came and roused me up; but I always kept a light in the window to guide the traveler to the house.

"One day we had a heavy pouring rain all day, and as night came on, instead of stopping, it seemed to increase in violence. The wind blew hard, and I thought to myself: This is, indeed, a fearful night; but it isn't probable there will be any travelers out to-night; however, I put my light in the window and went to bed about ten o'clock. I cannot say how long I had slept, when I was aroused by a heavy knocking at the door. I got up and opened it as soon as possible. There stood a man who seemed to be completely drenched with rain. I asked him to come in, but he said, 'Young man, I am very anxious to cross the bridge to-night, and would like to have you open the gate for me.' I tried to persuade him to come in and stop till morning; but he said he could not think of it, as he had a child on the other side who was very sick, and he felt that he must go. So I took a lantern and the key, and went out to let him go across; but when we got where the bridge had been, we found it was blown away. Then the stranger gazed in astonishment, and exclaimed, 'What shall I do? What shall I do? I fear my child will die before I can get to it.'

"Then I said, 'Friend, there is a place a few rods above here where I have often waded across in pleasant weather. If you will get upon my back and trust yourself with me, I can get you across safely.' He said, 'Willingly, willingly, young man, if you are disposed to undertake it.' So I took him upon my back, but as the water was quite deep I had to use a great deal of caution and care; but at last I got him safely upon the opposite bank. When I put him down he offered me a well-filled purse. I thanked him and said I wished for nothing but the regular fee. As I spoke I looked toward him, and a halo of light seemed to surround his head as he repeated these words—'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' and he was gone.

"How I got back and into bed again I have no recollection. In the morning when I got up my light was burning in the window as usual. The rain had ceased, and I looked out to view the ruin caused by the late storm, when low and behold! there stood the bridge, apparently as strong and defiant as ever. Then I knew my labor of love had been 'all a dream;' but, boys, it left an indelible impression upon my mind, and after that I was more inclined than ever to do good as I had an opportunity.

"I hope you will profit by the secret I have told you. Try to do as you would be done by; it is a very easy rule to follow. If you are inclined to do wrong just stop and think, Would I like to have another do so to me? That will decide it, and then you must do the right thing.

"Boys, I am an old man now; but let me tell you that I never found anything that would yield better than the practice of the Golden Rule."

A WORD ABOUT COOKING.—Cooking is not merely "the art of providing dainty bits to fatten out the ribs," as the sorrowful old proverb has it; it is the art of turning every morsel to the best use; it is the exercise of skill, thought, ingenuity, to make every morsel of food yield the utmost nourishment and pleasure of which it is capable. To do this, or to legislate for the doing of it, does not depend on the amount of money spent; the same qualities of character are demanded, whether the housekeeping be on a large or a small scale.

A woman who is not essentially kind-hearted cannot be a comfortable housekeeper; a woman who has not judgment, firmness, forethought, and general good sense, cannot manage her house prudently or comfortably, no matter what amount of money she may have at her command; a woman who has not an eye for detecting and remedying disorderliness and carelessness cannot keep her house fresh and pleasant, no matter how much money she may spend on furniture and upholstery. It is not money, but management, that is the great requisite in procuring comfort in household arrangements.

Of course, nobody asks impossibilities; none but the Jews ever yet succeeded in "making bricks without straw," and even they found it difficult, and lamented wearily; but the woman with limited means may make her things as perfect after their kind as the woman with ample means, only she will be obliged to put more of herself into the management, and this element of personality has a charm which no appointments made through the best staff of servants can possess—it is a luxury that money cannot buy, and generally hinders. The luxury of completeness must always depend on the individual care and skill of the mistress. That a thing should be perfect after its kind is all that can be required.

Bacon and venison lie at opposite ends of the economical scale; but if the woman whose means allow her to procure bacon only is careful to have it as dressed and served that it is as good as bacon ought to be, she has attained the only perfection required at her hands; and it is the higher qualities brought to bear on a common action which give to the result a beauty and value not its own. We are all so much creatures of imagination that we think more of the signified than of the actual fact. When a man sees his table nicely set out he believes in the goodness of his dinner in a way that would be impossible with the self-same dinner on a soiled tablecloth with a slovenly arrangement.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Agricultural Policy of the South.

The opinion here given of the proper course to be pursued by Southern landholders may ruffle the pride of some, and may conflict with the ideas of others, as to the policy to be pursued in the material reconstruction of the South, but the writer, as one of the sufferers himself, trusts he may be excused for the utterance of honest opinions dictated by the deplorable condition to which the planting States have been reduced, not only by the ravages of war, but also by the industrial paralysis in which they have been held since their subjection.

That the entire agricultural system of fourteen States has been partially, or completely overthrown, and that another, more in accordance with their future condition, is to be adopted, it is mere folly to deny, and the sooner we make up our minds to accept the situation, and make the best of it, the better for all.

Under the new system the first and most obvious change to be made is in the extent of landed estates. These in most instances are far too large, and though it may wound the honorable pride of the holder to alienate even a portion of his ancestral acres, he had better part with that portion by his own act than to lose the whole under the hammer of the sheriff. To sell a part to obtain capital wherewith to cultivate the remainder is obviously the true policy; but can this be done? Can it be of general application? We fear not, for where all are sellers, where are the buyers to come from? Under present circumstances we cannot get them at the North or abroad, for neither capital nor labor will seek a country whose political status is undefined. What is the best course to pursue? Why, clearly to reduce the number of cultivated acres to an extent proportioned to the diminished labor, and increase the mowing and grazing land. The system of inclosures should be done away with entirely, and every man be compelled to take care of his own stock; but if this be too abrupt a change we should at least get rid of the cross-fencing by keeping the grazing lands in a permanent pasture, and this, by the way, makes the best grazing. The older the sod, the richer the grass, is in Europe an agricultural maxim. Another thing to be done is to aim at greater diversity of production. Southern agriculture has been too long running in one groove. Why should we confine ourselves to four or five staples when we might have a dozen? Let us by stringent legislation get rid of the thousands of useless curs which infest the land, and we will produce more and better wool and mutton than the Northern States. The whole of our middle region, along the Blue Ridge, is the best dairy region on the continent. Most of the Northern States, including Wisconsin, are becoming large growers of hops, at remunerating prices, and yet there are hundreds of gardens in Virginia and Maryland in which hop vines have been flourishing from colonial times to the present, without care or attention.—Turf, Field and Farm.

EFFECTS OF SHADE ON THE GRAPE VINE.—The roots of the grape vine require to be cool and shaded from the sun. In the forest the wild vine climbs to the tops of the loftiest trees in search of sunshine and exposure to rain and dew, but its roots are damp, being imbedded in the moist leaf mold, the debris of the foliage which has been accumulating for centuries, and they are frequently within reach of water.

This year we noticed a vine which had been planted against a high board fence, and had not grown much for two years, put out most extraordinary shoots, some of them being eight or ten feet in length. The apparent cause of the luxuriant growth was the shading of the roots by a boarded seat of an arbor, which was placed over them, a space being left between the seat and the fence for the vine to send up its shoots. By this means the roots were shaded from the sun, but were accessible to rain, and were kept in a desirable state of moisture.—Western Rural.

NEW POINT IN A GOOD COW.—"Dairyman," in the Practical Farmer for September, presents a point in choosing a cow which is new to us, but there is certainly sound philosophy in it. Other things being equal, he considers a cow which brings her first calf at a season of the year when feed is fresh and tender and most productive of milk, as the month of June, worth twice as much as one that brings her first calf in winter. He says he saw a very promising half Alderney heifer which took a premium at the Pennsylvania State Fair, for which the owner asked $60. He offered to give the price provided she was to calve in June, but finding she was to calve in February, $30 was all he would offer for her.—Wis. Farmer.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.
Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.
When was it established? 1850.
Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Dorcmus, D D.
Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.
What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.
What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.
What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.
What are the terms of membership?
The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.
The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.
The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.
The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.
The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.
Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.
Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word; no tampering with the text; no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal many offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited but few variations since our last issue. The principal exception to this remark is in our leading staple, which has recovered from the unfavorable reaction it suffered on Friday last. The sales at the same time have been to a moderate extent, being restricted by the small supply offering, and buyers standing aloof toward the close. Sugar and molasses have been dull, with limited receipts and a light demand. The movement in Western produce also has shown but little activity, and few changes in prices. Operations in some branches of trade have been checked by the decline in City Treasury notes, and the reluctance of holders to convert them into national currency at the ruling rates, while all purchases at wholesale have to be paid for in the latter.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that, after an unusually limited business, the market closed on Friday evening at a falling off of fully 1c. from the previous advance, Ordinary being quoted at 19 to 20c., Good Ordinary at 21 to 21½c., Low Middling at 22 to 22½, Middling at 23 to 23¼, and Strict Middling at 24c., since which, under the influence of the highly favorable telegrams from Liverpool, the decline has been recovered. On Saturday the movement commenced with a revival of the demand and a better feeling generally, while operations were restricted by the moderate supply offering, and the advanced pretensions of factors, many of whom contended for 1c. over the ruling rates of the previous day. The sales nevertheless reached 5,000 bales, at irregular prices, indicating on the whole an average recovery of ½c. of the previous decline. On Monday stimulating accounts from Liverpool gave an additional impetus to the demand, and although the offerings continued limited, 4,750 bales changed hands at a further improvement of fully 1c, Low Middling closing at 23½ to 24c., and Middling at 24¼ to 25c. On Tuesday the market opened with a disposition on the part of factors to adhere to previous rates, which were quite above the views of buyers for shipment, and although at a later hour the former manifested a disposition to make concessions to a fair extent, yet it failed to renew the movemment, and the business was confined to 600 bales, at an average falling off of ½c. from Monday's figures, closing so nearly at a standstill that quotations are nominal.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 10,350 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 11,589 bales, against 12,886 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 1,297 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 484,267 bales, against 591,061 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 291,200 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 148,711 bales to Great Britain, of 55,881 to France, and of 121,462 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	21 to 21½
Good Ordinary	— to 22½
Low Middling	— to 23½
Middling	— to 24¼

Sugar.—The supply is limited, but the demand is only in a jobbing way. We quote:—Inferior 10c. per lb., Common 12, Fair 13¾, Fully Fair 14¾, Prime 14, Choice 16, Yellow Clarified 16½, and White 17.

Molasses.—The receipts are light, but sell slowly. Cuba reboiled commands 66c. per gallon, Louisiana reboiled 70 to 85, Common, not reboiled, 60, Refinery reboiled 70 to 85, Golden Syrup $1 to $1 10 per gallon.

Flour.—There has not been much demand since our last review, but the stock on hand being small, and the receipts (especially of Double Extra and the grades below) light, holders are firmer in their views and are asking higher prices. The principal sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 2,500 barrels, ranging from $9 to $15 50, according to quality.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

In every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 83 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Colier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Colier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Colier can cure any case of Cancer

LOUISIANA STATE ELECTION.

RATIFICATION OF THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION.—RULES AND REGULATIONS TO BE OBSERVED.

Gen. Hancock has issued the following order, fixing the 17th and 18th days of April next for the election to ratify the new State Constitution, and prescribing certain regulations under which the election is to be conducted:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST.,
New Orleans, La., March 11, 1868.

Special Orders No. 55.

[Extract.]

* * * * * * *

3. Whereas, A convention recently assembled at New Orleans, La., in compliance with Special Orders No. 166, from these headquarters, dated October 21, 1867, did in pursuance of the act of Congress mentioned in said order, proceed to frame a Constitution and civil government for the State of Louisiana; and

Whereas, The acts of Congress provide that the election for the ratification of said Constitution shall be conducted by the officers or persons appointed or to be appointed by the Commanding General; said election will be held in the State of Louisiana, from 7 A. M. to 7 P. M., on the 17th and 18th days of April, 1868, at which the registered voters of said State may vote for or against the Constitution submitted to them by said convention:

I. Commencing fourteen days before the election, Boards of Registrars will, after having given reasonable public notice, revise at the places where the boards are in session, for a period of five days, the registration lists, and upon being satisfied that any person not entitled thereto has been registered, will strike the name of such person from the list. The boards will also, during the same period, add to the registry the names of all persons who at that time possess the qualifications required by law, and who have not already been registered. See Section 7, Supplementary Act of July 19, 1867.

Upon completion of the revision of registration, the Boards of Registrars will immediately proceed to make up their precinct poll books—for this purpose they will use the precinct books used at the last election, making the necessary corrections. They will also forward to these headquarters a tabular statement, giving the number of persons registered (white and colored) during the revision; the number rejected (white and colored;) the names of the persons refused registration and stricken from the rolls will be given with statement, showing the causes therefor.

II. The polls will be opened at every voting precinct in each parish at the places designated by law. No person will be allowed to vote whose name does not appear on the registry list. The election will be by ballot. "Those voting in favor of the Constitution shall have written or printed on the ballots by which they vote, as aforesaid, the words, 'For the Constitution,' and those voting against the Constitution shall have written or printed on such ballots the words, 'Against the Constitution.'" Each ballot presented by a colored voter will be marked "Colored," by one of the judges of election. Poll books will be kept of the names of the voters as at ordinary elections in the State. As each voter presents his certificate one of the judges will indorse on it "Voted," with the date, and signed by one of the commissioners.

III. The Boards of Registration of each parish will be superintendents of and will conduct the election, and will see that all the necessary preparations are made for properly conducting the same; that due and efficient notice is given of the time and object of the election, commissioners appointed, proper ballot-boxes prepared, etc.

If, from any cause, any of the Registrars of a parish fail to perform the duty incumbent upon them, either at the revision directed in paragraph one, or at the election, their places will be filled by the clerk of the District Court, or recorder of the parish or assessor of the Parish Court, in the order named, provided they can qualify according to law. If vacancies cannot thus be filled, the remaining portions of the Registration Board will fill them with persons who can duly qualify, notifying this office of the same.

IV. The election at each precinct will be presided over by the three commissioners, who will be sworn in the same manner as the registrars. Should only two of the commissioners be present they shall appoint a third; should only one be present, he shall appoint another, and they together shall appoint a third.

To carry out this commissioners are authorized to administer the required oath.

V. At the close of the election the commissioners will carefully count and make duplicate returns of the result of the election; stating, also, in four separate lists, respectively, the number of white voters for, the number of colored voters for, and the number of each, against the Constitution. The ballots will then be replaced in the ballot-boxes, which will be sealed, and together with the registration and election records, will be carried by one of the commissioners to the court house, or place designated, and turned over to the Board of Registrars.

The board will then carefully count and make duplicate returns of the votes cast, in the manner prescribed for commissioners of election, and will see whether the vote of each precinct corresponds with the record of the commissioners.

The ballots will then be replaced in the ballot-boxes, which will be sealed, and together with the registration and election records will be turned over to such parish officer or member of the Registration Board as said board may select, who will receipt therefor, and will be held responsible for the same. Each member of the board will make affidavit to the correctness of the returns, one copy of which will then be brought by some member of the board to the Commanding General of the Fifth Military District, at New Orleans; the other copy will be retained by the board until further orders.

VI. The Boards of Registrars and Commissioners will see that a full and fair opportunity is given for depositing his ballot to every man entitled to vote, and will generally do everything that is requisite to secure a full and impartial expression of the opinions and wishes of the registered voters.

VII. If from any cause the elections in any of the precincts cannot be held, as for instance the inability to procure properly qualified commissioners, the Boards of Registrars will give timely notice to the voters thereof as to where they shall vote in an adjoining precinct, in their own parishes.

VIII. No persons shall act as commissioners or registrars under this order who are candidates at the election for any office.

IX. The sheriff of each parish is made responsible for the preservation of good order, and the perfect freedom of the ballot at the various election precincts in his parish. To this end he will appoint a deputy—who shall be duly qualified under the law of the State—for each precinct in the parish, who will be required to be present at the place of voting during the whole time the election is being held. The said deputies will promptly and fully obey every demand made upon their official services in preserving the peace and good order by the Commissioners of Election. Deputies appointed in accordance with the foregoing will be paid the same as commissioners, on accounts approved by the registrar, out of the reconstruction fund.

As an additional measure to secure the purity of the election, each commissioner and registrar is hereby clothed, during the election, with authority to call upon the civil officers of the parish to make arrests, and in case of failure of the aforesaid civil officers, are empowered to perform their duties during the election. They will make full report of such failures on the part of civil officers to the Commanding General of the Fifth Military District.

X. All places where intoxicating liquors are retailed will be closed on the days of election, and such sale of liquors is prohibited during said election days.

XI. Military interference with elections, "unless it shall be necessary to keep the peace at the polls," is prohibited by law; and no soldiers will be allowed to appear at any polling place, unless as citizens of the State they are registered as voters, and then only for the purpose of voting; but the commanders of posts will be prepared to act promptly if the civil authorities fail to preserve the peace.

XII. When the returns shall have been received at the headquarters of the Fifth Military District, the result of the election will be published by the commander thereof.

XIII. Persons who convey returns to the headquarters of the Fifth Military District will be paid at New Orleans reasonable expenses incurred in making the journey and returning.

XIV. In case of questions arising as to the right of any individual to be registered, the person deeming himself aggrieved is entitled to his appeal from the decision of the board, and the boards are directed to make a full statement of the facts in such cases, and to forward the same to these headquarters without unnecessary delay.

XV. Should Congress enact hereafter that at the approaching election votes shall also be cast for State and other officers, the same registrars and commissioners will act under this order for the election of said officers. In such an event orders will issue from these headquarters, notifying the qualified voters that such an election is authorized.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

Sunday was a day of more than ordinary interest in Baltimore; and the session of our Conference is an important investment for the cause of genuine Southern Methodism in this latitude. The Baltimore Conference held the anniversary of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society on Saturday evening at the Central Church. It was numerously attended, and resulted in a handsome contribution to the treasury, amounting to nearly one thousand dollars. The second General Missionary meeting was held on Tuesday evening in Trinity Church.

Bishop Wightman, Dr. A. L. P. Green, of Tennessee, and Rev. G. W. E. Cunnyngham, of the Holston Conference, addressed the meeting. The speeches were admirable, and singularly happy in presenting the claims both of the Home and Foreign field. Dr. Sehon and Dr. McFerrin, the two secretaries, were both present. Dr. McFerrin managed the collection with his usual tact, energy and earnestness; and there being no appeal, the people surrendered at discretion. The best feeling prevailed throughout. Everybody, at a late hour, returned, highly gratified with the result. The Sunday school mass meeting came off on Sunday afternoon. Here again our wise and philosophic friend, Dr. Green, of Nashville, was perfectly at home among the children. Suffice it to say, that in the judgment of all we have heard speak of it, his speech was the best on the subject they had ever heard. We claim the Doctor as a member of our Conference ex officio. Long may he live to bless the church by the wisdom of his counsels and the power and pathos of his evangelical preaching.

Bishop Doggett ordained two ministers on Saturday and fifteen on Sunday. The congregations were very large. Those at the New Assembly Rooms, Central and Trinity were immense—multitudes being unable to get inside of the spacious buildings. Bishop Doggett preached at Central Church, and Bishop Wightman at Trinity. The ordination of elders took place in the evening at Trinity church, on which occasion the Rev. A. Holland, of Kentucky, preached a sermon remarkable for its purity and power. The Rev. W. E. Munsey preached in New Assembly Rooms—fully sustaining his great reputation as a modern evangelist. The pulpits of many of our sister churches were occupied by the ministers of the Conference; and the reports from all which have reached us are most satisfactory. Bro. Holland preached again on Monday night in the Central Church. It was a most successful effort, which was fully appreciated by the large audience in the generous contribution which followed. This collection was for the worn-out preachers and widows and orphans of deceased ministers—amounting to nearly $800. This, added to the amount contributed on Sunday, will make the handsome sum of $1,000. It is hoped the stewards will be able to pay the entire claim, dollar for dollar, which has not occurred in the last twenty years!

The great Sunday school celebration at Trinity Church was the most interesting we have ever attended. We hope the pastor, Rev. C. H. Hall, will give us a full report of this grand affair. The collection amounted to $1,178, to be applied to the missionary and superannuated preacher's funds. The most beautiful feature of the occasion was the presence of the Bible and Sunday school classes, who had, by their own efforts, raised this magnificent contribution.—Episcopal Methodist.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

OPENING OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

Another day's excitement in Washington, equal to any that has been witnessed here since the impeachment began in earnest nearly four weeks ago. The adoption of the ticket system kept the crowd from thronging inside of the capitol building, and secured comfortable seats to the favored few. But in the avenues and at the hotels and street corners there were scenes of excitement amounting almost to a tumult from 10 o'clock this A. M. until 6 this evening, as news or rumors from one or the other end of the capitol was received and discussed. Nothing like it has been witnessed here since the most critical period of the war, when dispatches from the front telling of decisive battles were received and talked over.

ENTRANCE OF JUDGE CHASE.

Promptly at 1 o'clock Chief Justice Chase, in his judicial robes, entered the chamber by one of the side doors. Mr. Wade recognized him and announced that the hour had arrived for the Senate to resolve itself into a Court of Impeachment, and thereupon vacated the chair, which the Chief Justice quickly filled.

PROCLAMATION TO KEEP SILENCE.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then made a proclamation, as on former days, commanding all persons to keep silence while the Senate of the United States is sitting for the trial of articles of impeachment against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States. He utters this in a clear, loud voice, which resounds through the chamber in comforting contrast to that of the Chief Justice, which is heard not at all in the galleries, and scarce two seats off on the floor.

AN IMPATIENT PROSECUTOR CHECKED.

Mr. Howard, impatient of formalities and ceremonies, and anxious to proceed with the regular business of impeachment, immediately rose with a motion that the House of Representatives be informed that the court is in session. But the Chief Justice checked him with the reminder that the journal of the last day's proceedings must be read, and Mr. Forney came forward and read it.

A NEEDLESS MOTION MOVED.

'Now,' said Mr. Howard, rising after the journal had been read, 'if it be in order, I move that the Secretary be directed to notify the House of Representatives,' etc. The order was then adopted, but its execution was unnecessary, for the managers, with the exception of Mr. Butler and Mr. Stevens, were waiting just outside the main entrance door of the Senate, with about twenty members of the House at their backs, ready to march in at a moment's notice. They entered, Bingham and Boutwell arm in arm, followed by Logan and Wilson, and then Williams, and walked down the aisle to the table arranged for them, to the left of the presiding officers, where they seated themselves.

THE AMERICAN 'COUTHON' BROUGHT IN.

Mr. Stevens soon after entered, borne upon his chair, through a side door. He looked about as he has looked any time these three years—no nearer dead than when he has been reported about to step into the grave, and no more alive than when enthusiastic friends have predicted another period of useful public service for him. He sat at the table with his brother managers, but took no active part in the proceedings.

ADDITIONAL SENATORS SWORN.

During the day the Chief Justice, at the suggestion of Mr. Grimes, now directed the Secretary to call the names of those not yet sworn as members of the court, that they might come forward and be qualified. Messrs. Edmunds, of Vermont, Patterson, of New Hampshire, and Vickers, of Maryland, were called and responded. Mr. Cragin, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Doolittle, of Wisconsin, were called, and did not respond. They have not yet returned from campaigning in the East.

RETURN OF SUMMONS.

Next the Secretary was directed to read the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms, which he did, as follows:

The foregoing writ of summons, and the foregoing present, addressed to me, were duly served by me on Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, at the Executive Mansion, his usual place of abode, on Saturday, March 11th, inst., at the hour of 7 o'clock in the afternoon.

(Signed) GEO. S. BROWN,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

MR. JOHNSON CALLED TO ANSWER IMPEACHMENT.

The Chief Justice directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to call the accused, and Mr. Brown, from his position at the right of the chair, called out the President's name three times, 'Andrew Johnson! Andrew Johnson! Andrew Johnson! Appear and answer to the charge of impeachment, exhibited against you by the House of Representatives of the United States.'

Immediately, and as if in response to this citation, the main door of the Senate chamber opened, and many expected to see the President enter, but it was Gen. Butler instead, who walked quickly up to the table, around which his associates were seated, and sat down.

PRESIDENT'S COUNSEL APPEAR.

After an interval of about half a minute Reverdy Johnson rose and said that he understood the counsel for the accused were present. He moved that they be admitted to the chamber. The motion was not formally put, as before the Senator had fairly taken his seat Messrs. Stanbery, Curtis and Nelson, the President's counsel, entered, and were seated at a table opposite to that provided for the managers and to the left of the chair.

ENTRANCE OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE.

At about half-past 1 o'clock a large number of members of the House appeared outside the door of the chamber. Mr. Washburn was at the head of the procession, and a little delay in obtaining official recognition irritated him so much that he inquired in an angry voice, audible to the galleries, 'Where's the Sergeant-at-Arms?' That functionary was quickly at hand, and the members of the House of Representatives were announced by him to the Senate. They entered and took what seats were vacated in the lobbies and elsewhere, which were not sufficient to accommodate them all. Washburne, Colfax and McPherson seated themselves prominently in the aisle in front of the chair. Ashley limped about the floor with the aid of a stick, and with the air of a man who had done it all, and knew he had. It was worth while to see him look at the galleries with a consciousness of his own importance beaming out of him and bristling all over him.

INITIATION OF IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

In response to a request from the Chief Justice, Mr. Stanberry rises to put in his reply on behalf of the President. He is the President's chief counsel, and when he rises all eyes and ears are turned toward him—an old gentleman of fine appearance, tall and stately. He is well known to every Senator as an able lawyer, and all are afraid that he will make a good defense for the distinguished client. He reads from manuscript his authority to act as counsel, with his associates, J. S. Black, Wm. M. Evarts, B. R. Curtis and Thomas A. R. Nelson, and concludes by asking forty days in which to file his reply. At the suggestion of the Chief Justice he reads another paper which sets forth at length the reasons why the forty days should be granted, and then takes his seat. There are whisperings among the Senators as he does so, which can easily be interpreted into a dissent from his request.

Mr. Bingham rises in reply to Mr. Stanbery. It is his first speech in the case, and all are anxious to hear it. He acquitted himself well, speaks to the point, objects to the length of time asked by the defense, and pleads a rule of the court, which seems to require that the reply be ready to-day. Mr. Curtis, a low-sized, heavy-set man, and not unlike the President in general appearance, except that he is much younger, rises in response to Mr. Bingham, and makes a short speech, which shows him to be a keen lawyer and good orator. He reads the rules of the court differently from Mr. Bingham, and cannot possibly see how Mr. Bingham can give construction so prejudicial to his client—to this particular one.

In the midst of this discussion Mr. Edmunds offered a proposition that the reply of the President be put in on the 1st of April, the replication of the managers on the 3d, the trial to commence on the 6th. This is not well received by the advocates of impeachment. They evidently object to so long a time, and want the matter to be pushed to a conclusion as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, on behalf of the managers, replied to Mr. Curtis. He spoke briefly, but to the point, and insists that the President's reply should be filed to-day.

Mr. Stanbery again rises, this time with manuscript or notes. He shows by a short speech that he has been refreshing his memory on the impeachment of the President, alludes to the Star Chamber proceedings, and asks if the court is going to copy after the unjust and summary disposition in such an important case as that now before them.

The debate occupies about an hour; at the expiration of which time, on the motion of Mr. Morton, of Indiana, the court retires for consultation. The Senators, on the adoption of Morton's motion, withdrew to the marble room, where they discussed the question of the length of time to be allowed the President. They were absent two hours. The Senate chamber during the recess was the scene of great confusion, noise and chattering in the galleries and on the floor. It was not unlike the bustle and rustle of an intermission between the acts of an opera multiplied by ten. Mr. Bingham and Mr. Stanbery talked pleasantly together, as if they were on the same, instead of opposing sides. Mr. Curtis and Mr. Nelson were formally introduced to the House managers, and the whole spectacle was like a very social gathering. To a member of the House, an old friend, Mr. Stanbery said: 'We have asked for forty days, but we don't expect to get it. But they may go ahead if they like; we are ready for them any time.' This, considering the plea of unreadiness he had just put in, astonished those who happened to hear it. The two hours were passed as two hours of anxious waiting always are. People wondered what was the matter, and if the Senators would ever return. But at fifteen minutes to four they did return, and the galleries were instantly hushed into silence.

PRESIDENT GRANTED TEN DAYS TO ANSWER.

The Chief Justice took the chair and announced that the court had overruled the motion for forty days, and had determined that the President should file his answer on the 23d of the month. About one in twenty of those present were able to hear the words of the Chief Justice, but all soon understood their purport.

END OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. Sherman offered a proposition that the trial commence on the 6th of April, to which Mr. Wilson moved an amendment substituting the 1st of April.

Mr. Butler rose and spoke about half an hour, urging the pressing necessity of a speedy disposition of the trial. He was replied to by Mr. Nelson.

Finally, at half-past 5 o'clock, a motion of Mr. Conkling's prevailed, that the President file his answer on the 23d, and the trial proceed as soon thereafter as the replication of the managers can be filed, which, according to the opinion of Mr. Butler and others, means the 24th. And so ended to-day's proceedings in the Court of Impeachment.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—The President was engaged to-day with his counsel—but few visitors were admitted.

Brownlow telegraphs that he does not want Federal assistance.

The Alabama Legislature is to meet thirty days after the passage of the new act. The second section of the old bill is omitted in the new one.

The McCardle opinion, it is said, is prepared, Miller and Swayne dissenting.

The opinion is said to be strongly adverse to the constitutionality of the reconstruction act, but it is doubtful whether it will be promulgated before the bill forbidding it becomes a law.

Judgment cannot be rendered after the act removing jurisdiction becomes a law. (See Chism vs. the State of Georgia.)

RALEIGH, N. C., March 17.—The Constitutional Convention adjourned to-day. The closing scenes last night and to-day were very discreditable.

After the ceremony of signing the constitution was gone through with the Conservatives, having refused to sign it, retired from the hall. The capitol bell was ordered to be rung in honor of the event.

The floor was cleared, and the black and white Radicals joined hands, forming a circle, and commenced a sort of corn-field dance, singing such songs as "Old John Brown's soul is marching on," and "We'll hang Jeff. Davis on a sour apple tree."

While the latter song was being sung a young rebel looker-on shouted "three cheers for Jeff. Davis," which was responded to by a few persons in the lobby and gallery.

This occasioned a momentary jar, but the Convention's hilarity was soon renewed and kept up until the members were exhausted.

THE EVENING PRAYER.

BY ERNEST WARE.

Father! the burning wheel
Of parting day rolls down the radiant west
To distant eyes that wake, while mine in rest
Thy gentle hand shall seal.

Now through the darkening height,
Whence dimly peers the timid twilight star,
Sweet contemplation wafts my soul afar,
Toward thee, unfading Light!

Now on her reverent prayer
Then brighter beamest than the face of noon,
Yet softer than the footfall of the moon
Along the sleeping air!

Thy day-beams all abroad
So fair illume the pathway of the cross,
She cannot choose but count her gains as loss,
And urge her way to God.

Her love, no taint and cold,
A worthless smoke, with sin and weakness blent,
Thy glory catching, mounts in swift ascent,
An incense-cloud of gold.

Now sweet before thy throne
To wrap her soul in sheltering robes of grace,
To gaze upon the brightness of thy face,
And call thee all our own!

We linger, love, and weep,
Till, many a gem aglow along the sky,
Thou over grateful heart and weary eye
Dost spread the veil of sleep.

A BISHOP for THE PACIFIC COAST.

MR. EDITOR: Some of the evil effects of an obstinate adhesion to usage, not because it involves a principle, but simply because it is a usage, are beginning to be realized in the trouble and expense of episcopal visitations to the Pacific coast.

Two weeks ago, in Dr. Hamilton's study, in Mobile, I had a conversation with Bishop Andrew on the subject of electing a bishop for California, and at that time could not understand why it was not done at the last General Conference held in New Orleans.—Bishop Andrew's letter in the Nashville Advocate, and a re-reading of the General Conference Daily, have given me light on this subject.

Dr. Fitzgerald and his associates in the General Conference from the Pacific Conference made a specialty of this one want of the work they represented. Early in the session of the Conference they brought the matter privately before a number of the leading members of the General Conference, and were assured that they should be gratified in a demand so reasonable, proper and necessary, and were told to select their man, and they should have him. They made their choice.

Thus stood the case up to within a short time before the adjournment of the General Conference—a time too short to repair the omission. The report of the Committee on Episcopacy startled the delegation from the coast by recommending the election of six new bishops without reference to the condition and wants of localities, and utterly ignoring the prayer of those brethren. When that report was brought in the General Conference refused to adopt it, and determined upon the election of four more bishops instead of six. But there was no modification of the report favorable to the coast.

Rev. J. G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, offered a resolution proposing to elect another bishop, to be ordained before the adjournment of the Conference. This resolution, no doubt, looked to the wants of the Pacific coast. It was rejected, however, upon the ground that it would have the appearance of electing a bishop for a particular place—the practical introduction of diocesan episcopacy.

There was no doubt of the need for such a bishop resident in California. There was no doubt of the trouble, expense and risk of episcopal visitation to the coast by any of the existent bishops. The only barrier was the apparent innovation. This objection coming from a body that had already introduced some six or eight radical and important changes of church polity, and changes which were to be submitted to the test of time and experiment for their utility, strikes some of us not in the General Conference as strange. The same Conference continued the exceptional rule in favor of the pastors in New Orleans, as directly opposed to "usage" as an exceptional rule placing a resident bishop in California. Having introduced changes in which there was doubt and problem of utility, and having modified the rule of a subordinate pastorate, would it have been a too great perversion of usage to send a head pastor to a place in which his presence and services were a profoundly felt want—one which would save the church much expense, and the college of bishops or some member of it much risk and pain of travel, and one which may cost us the Pacific Conference? And will not the coming future repair the evil and the injustice done these brethren? We imagine the members of the General Conference will not soon forget the speech of Dr. Fitzgerald on this subject.—And though it failed of its purpose then, we expect it will yet reach its point.

I, for one—and many with me—am glad to see Bishop Andrew standing to his position on this subject. Old as he is, and superannuated in view of his bodily infirmities, his eye, in looking anxiously over the great, broad and still widening field of Southern Methodism, brings with it the capacity of a prophet and a seer, and his counsels should be heeded, in the fear of God and the love of our church, more than ever, for the reason that we may not much longer retain them. His advanced thoughts in Methodistic economy and progress are great beyond that of the great body of the church, in proportion as his duties and experience are in advance of ours. May the future speedily realize all the practical benefit of his prayers and hopes.

IMPROVED MALLEABLE IRON.—Mr. J. Hargreaves, of Appleton Widnes, Warrington (England,) has been some time investigating the causes of loss of metal when malleable iron is made from cast-iron, with the object of reducing that loss as much as possible. The loss of weight caused by the abstraction of carbon, silicium, sulphur, etc., is of course unavoidable, so far as the elimination of those elements themselves are concerned. But when silicium is present, whether in combination with the iron or in the form of sand adhering to the pig, the formation of oxyd of iron is required to effect its separation, in the form of tap cinder or basic silicate of iron, and this oxyd is obtained at the expense of the metal. The sand which adheres to the pig thus causes a loss of from three to seven times its own weight of iron. Not only is there this loss caused by oxydization, but the time, labor and fuel required to effect it is thrown away. It is, therefore, desirable that the presence of silicium, whether in the form of sand or otherwise, should be avoided. To prevent the loss of metal from this cause (generally amounting to from three to six per cent.) the iron is run from the blast furnace into beds of granulated or powdered iron ore. By this not only is the loss of metal reduced, but the time, labor and fuel required to puddle it are also appreciably diminished, the iron is somewhat improved, and the production of tap cinder diminished. The improvement has been patented. Makers of malleable iron will readily appreciate the improvement. To iron-founders it is also of importance, as they avoid the loss of weight and depreciation of quality consequent on the presence of sand, and a smaller amount of flux is required in the cupola. We understand that there is no expense required to put it in operation, except the difference between the cost of sand and small iron ore.—Mechanics' Magazine.

THE SPECTRUM TEST.—So delicate is the spectrum test in determining the presence of certain metals that it is possible to recognize in this way the 1-60,000th part of a grain of potassa or baryta; the 1-1,000,000th of a grain of lime or strontia; the 1-60,000,000th of a grain of lithia, and the 1-160,000,000th of a grain of soda. Dr. Letheby, a distinguished London chemist, has detected by this means the presence of blood in the stains of linen which had been laid away for seventeen years.—Scientific American.

CHAT ABOUT CONFERENCE.

SITTING NO. IV.

And now we come to the "cabinet." Usually at the close of the first morning's session the bishop requests: "The presiding elders will please meet me at my room at —— o'clock." And when the bishop gets those gentlemen closeted in due form the cabinet is in session. Who are the presiding elders? They are semi-bishops, chosen for their piety, discretion, devotedness, experience of church economy and capacity for ecclesiastical enterprise; for their brotherly kindness as men of "devout minds;" in a word, for their ability to preach, to preside, to counsel, to travel, to endure "hardness," and to do all the work of a Methodist preacher. They are the best abused class of late among us. Many "constitution menders," planning various improvements, and modifications and reforms, restive under the old regime, and impatient for experimental legislation, heave away at the presiding elder as the impassable barrier. Many "sir oracles," who would have no utterances less mysterious and magnificent than their own to issue from their metropolitan shrines, would with depreciating modesty fain forbid a presiding elder to "ope his mouth." Many "lions," rampant in the hearts of the people, divide with growling reluctance a part of the "royal share" with a presiding elder. Many a covetous disciple, splenetic under the conviction of duty to support the denominational system of ministerial supply, vents his violent complaint at the cumbrous, expensive, unnecessary office of presiding elder—as a fifth wheel in the machinery.

They are the best advised class among us. The bishop advises them, and they advise one another; and the preachers advise them, and the stewards advise them, and the people advise them, and their wives often advise them. They ought to be safe in such a multitude of counselors.

They are the most self-sacrificing class among us. They are away from home three-fourths of their time. They travel in all kinds of weather and stop at all sorts of places. They are not the recognized pastors of any particular flock, and miss all those endearing attentions and delicate recollections that hover about a parsonage. They cannot rejoice and weep with their own, distinctively, at the births and marriages and funerals of their people. They are expected to preach "powerfully," despite the fatigue of travel; to have the unction of prayer upon them, independently of the irregularity of habits into which they are forced, and to administer ordinances unceasingly without respect to the "weakness of the flesh." And after all these painful privations and exhausting travels and labors, their pecuniary remuneration is often meagre and insufficient. There is a compensation, however, derived from this office that is peculiar and precious. The presiding elder has a wider scope and a more extended opportunity for the use of his "credentials sacred," and he is called upon to impress and mould ministerial character by official association with the preachers of his district, and by bringing forward and training in some measure candidates for orders. Those who wish to see a presiding elder properly at work will find a model intimated in the sketch furnished in the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of "Post Oak Circuit." "A judge of the United States does not make the circuit of his courts with greater consciousness of the importance of the interests committed to his care than did Brother Blackman make the round of his district."

Thus it is with a presiding elder—as he is seen. In the "cabinet" he is not seen, but he is there nevertheless. The invisible is felt.

There is a fascination about the "cabinet" of an annual Conference, as there is about every interest conducted with dispatch and privacy. The expose of the "cabinet" in the announcement of appointments is generally the exciting finale of the session. To the uninitiated, especially, the "cabinet" is full of interest. We watch the faces of the presiding elders and try to read them. Some of them seem pleased and jubilant; some of them look sorry and puzzled. Some of them catch up a preacher about the door, or take him by the button in the Conference room, or spirit him away into a corner and squint their eyes and talk solemnly. Some of them smile in your face with unwonted glee, or grip your hand with an unusual pressure, or absolutely hug you in an ecstacy of personal kindness. Look out! my young brother, when a presiding elder warms thus toward you. It is significant. We have never been a member of the cabinet, and therefore cannot avouch the precise programme of business. We suppose, however, the order to be about as follows: When the members are all snugly shut within the bishop proposes prayer for divine guidance, assistance and wisdom. He then lectures the presiding elders upon the importance of keeping in mind the interest of all the preachers and people, and not those only of their own districts; and of ruling out every motive of selfishness, prejudice, etc., that would in any wise antagonize the general good. Under this appeal the most religious and candid ones melt down and quietly burn up a great deal of stubble that they have been accumulating; while the more obdurate and strategic sink their finesse and planning a degree or two out of sight. We suppose the bishop then takes the list of appointments and the division of the territory of the preceding session as the basis of operations, and first inquires if there are any modifications to be made in reference to the limits of the districts. This question is easily settled, we imagine, with now and then a little skirmishing between interested parties, by forming new districts, or by altering and amending the old, as is deemed expedient. Next comes the "tug of war," in deciding how the appointments are to be filled. We reckon that for the sake of system and that the interest of the whole church may be kept in view, the bishop takes up the districts in succession, and fills one or two appointments in each, as he proceeds—like the husbandman that plants a row across the whole field, and thus back and forth, at a measured distance. The work goes bravely on for a round or two, when suddenly progress is arrested. Presiding elder 1 wants a man he cannot get, or presiding elder 2 does not want a man he can get, or the bishop has received "a communication," and there is a pause—a pause sometimes eloquent, like that which distinguished the style of Wirt, if we are to judge from the sensation produced. Suddenly young "hot spur" is on his feet in vehement utterance and sweeping declaration; the point is relieved and business goes on. This is one phase of the "cabinet." There is another halt; what now? Why this brother must be changed according to statutory demand, and has a large family, or a sick and helpless wife, and there is no place open that would exactly suit him. He has been in a healthy region. If he goes down the country his family will be ruined. He is comfortable where he is. There is no parsonage over yonder, and but a slim chance for a support. It is a long way to move a man in his circumstances, and he is not able to meet the expenses of the trip. There is grave consultation, anxious interest, earnest sympathy, tearful silence. This is another phase of the "cabinet." The progress now is "full sad and slow," but still business advances. A hem! a hem! is answered to the name last called. Here is a knotty, impracticable piece of timber, that cannot be "fitly framed," and the builders reject it. The bishop tugs and pulls at the "brethren" and entreats them to do something with this brother; the presiding elders puzzle over him and sound him, but there comes the dead echo of a "gum log," and they do nothing. "Old charity" has this refused brother on his conscience, and is struggling to solve the problem: what shall I do with him? The bishop and the rest of the brethren relax, but "old charity" is held firmly in the grip of duty, until he consents to try that "brother." This is a groaning phase of the "cabinet." Meantime the bishop has been learning about the presiding elders from preachers, laymen, etc., and while sitting as responsible umpire in the "cabinet" has brought all his sagacity to bear

> "To keek through every other man
> Wi' sharpen'd, slee inspection."

Under the conviction that he ought to make some changes he drops a hint accordingly. Such a flutter there is in the "cabinet." How irresistible almost the inclination to say: "Bishop, is it I?" This is a startled phase of the "cabinet." But the imagination of an outsider is very fruitful about this permanent institution—the cabinet of an annual Conference. We would like to have a photograph of the different phases of a cabinet during the session. I believe I will study the art of writing with light if the Montgomery Conference will consent to let me have free access to its "cabinet." See what a group we had at Opelika! Bishop Wightman in the centre; then commencing at the right hand and passing round, you would have M. S. Andrews, D. M. Hudson, T. Moody, L. M. Wilson, J. T. Curry, W. A. McCarty, J. B. Cottrell, L. G. R. Wiggins, A. West—a distinguished "nine," and not a D. D. among them!

B. F. PERRY.

IT IS SURPRISING, says the Pall Mall Gazette, that so little notice has been taken of the remarkable movement that has been going on in Paris and other parts of France for the improvement of the education of the girls of the higher and middle classes. Some little time ago a certain number of parents, dissatisfied with the quality of the instruction given to their daughters in convents, began to send them to attend the lectures of a few able men, who taught various subjects as a matter of private enterprise. Of course the government soon stepped in, not to put down the proceedings, but to direct and extend them; and M. Duruy lost no time in effecting a connection between these teachers of young ladies and the University of Paris. A regular course of instruction was fixed upon, including mathematics, natural history, French history, etc., and the first course was commenced at the Sorbonne itself, on the 1st of December. Crowds of young ladies were present, including two nieces of the Empress Eugenie. A similar system is already at work in thirty or forty provincial towns, and several thousand girls are already receiving this new and more thorough kind of teaching. But France has its Archdeacon Denison, and it was not to be supposed the Bishop Dupanloup would be behind his brother churchman in England in denouncing secular education as the bane of orthodoxy. In a vigorous pamphlet, entitled "M. Duruy et l'Education des Filles," the bishop has fallen foul of the new abomination with even more than his usual vehemence of phrase. "Our girls," he exclaims, "have hitherto been educated upon the knees of the church; we are now going to pass them into the arms of the university." He professes himself, also, as being frightfully scandalized at the circumstance that in provincial towns the class-rooms are to be in the Mairie, where the youthful students may positively be looked at by policemen, pompiers, sergens de ville, and other profane personages, as they go to their lessons or return home. However, the bishop's onslaught is a failure. Some few parents have been scared by his denunciations, but the scheme has gained the notoriety it needed, and the Archbishop of Paris has quietly snubbed the opposition by speaking of it as a "noise." Of the importance of the movement there can be no question. Even if every girl in France should be taught to regard Charlemagne as the French sovereign of a French empire, and to believe that Napoleon won the battle of Waterloo, it will be a gain to the country that they should be subjected to some sort of training higher than that combination of worldly and pious frivolities which has been too often the best education at their command.

A 'REAL IMAGE' stereoscope has been produced in Paris. In the ordinary stereoscope the observer places his two eyes opposite two lenses, and sees the virtual images of two pictures apparently at the same place. In the 'real image' stereoscope the observer stands about two feet from the instrument and looks at a frame containing a single large lens. He then sees—just in front of the lens—a real and inverted image of each of the two pictures, the union of which forms the appearance of a solid figure or 'ghost' in the air, between himself and the apparatus.—*Am. ANECDOTES OF GENERAL LEE.

In all his official intercourse and private conversation General Lee never breathed a vindictive sentiment toward the enemy who so severely taxed his resources and ingenuity, and put against him so many advantages in superior means and numbers. He had none of the Yankeephobia common in the Southern army; he spoke of the Northern people without malevolence, and in a style that deprecated their political delusions rather than denounced their crimes, and he generally referred to the enemy in quiet and indifferent words, quite in contrast to the epithets and anathemas which were popularly showered on 'the Yankees.' On one occasion a spectator describes him riding up to the Rockbridge Artillery, which was fiercely engaging the enemy, and greeting his son Robert, who as a private soldier was bravely working one of the guns. 'How d'ye do, father?' was all that Robert had to say as he continued his duty at the gun; and General Lee replied quietly: 'That is right, my son; drive these people back.' At another time, in sight of the enemy on the Rapidan, General Lee was standing near his lines conversing with two of his officers, one of whom was known to be a hard fighter and a hard swearer, but a cordial hater of the Yankees. After a silence of some moments the latter officer, looking at the Yankees with a dark scowl on his face, exclaimed most emphatically, 'I wish they were all dead.' General Lee, with the grace and manner peculiar to himself, replied, 'How can you say so, General? Now I wish they were all at home attending to their own business, and leave us to do the same.' He then moved off, when the first speaker, waiting until he was out of earshot, turned to his companion, and in the most earnest tone said, 'I would not say so before General Lee, but I wish they were all dead and in—!' When this 'amendment' to the wish was afterwards repeated to General Lee, in spite of his gooduess and customary reproof of profanity, he could not refrain from laughing heartily at the speech, which was characteristic of one of his favorite officers. His scanty meals were the occasion of some thoughtless jokes and many comic anecdotes. In his tent meat was eaten but twice a week. His ordinary dinner consisted of a head of cabbage boiled in salt water, and a pone of corn bread. The story is jocosely told that on one occasion a number of gentlemen having appointed to dine with him he had ordered his servant to provide a repast of cabbage and middling. An unusually small bit of middling garnished the dish—so small that the polite guests all declined middling, and it remained on the dish when they rose from the table. Next day the General (remembering the untouched meat) ordered his servant to bring 'that middling.' The man hesitated, scratched his head, and finally said: 'De fact is, mas'r Robert, dat ar middlin' was borrid middlin', and I done give it back to de man whar I got it from.'

PAPER FOR BUILDING PURPOSES.—In building houses it has become a common practice for the builders to buy the doors and windows already made. It is now proposed to supply them in like manner with the walls and ceilings, in the form of slabs, to be used as a substitute for lath and plaster. These slabs are made of cane fiber—a cheap material obtained from the cane of the Southern cane-breaks, by disintegration effected by the explosive force of steam, and costing about ten dollars a ton, mixed with clay, resin, size and other cheap materials. The cane fiber is also made into paper of various kinds.

The following advantages are claimed for this new building material:—In a few hours all the walls and ceilings of a house can be put up by nailing them to the ordinary battens upon which the laths are nailed. The work can be done as well in winter as in summer time, and no drying is required. The fibrous slabs do not warp, crack, break, peel, shell, crumble nor decay; and they keep out damp, heat and cold better than lath and plaster. They are somewhat similar but asserted to be superior to the panels or wainscoting found in many palaces and mansions in England. Their cost is said to be less than half the cost of common lath and plaster. It is proposed to make them fire-proof and water-proof, that they may serve for the roofs and outer walls of houses better than clapboard and shingles.

According to estimates which have been made, the cost of an ordinary cottage house will be very much less than the present cost of a frame house of the same size; and it is claimed fibrous slab houses can be erected in less than one-fourth of the time now required to erect other houses.—American Artisan.

THE SCIENCE OF A SNOW-FLAKE.

BY ROBERT HUNT, F. R. S.

"Thick clouds ascend; in whose capacious womb
A vapory deluge lies, to snow congealed.
Heavy they roll their fleecy world along,
And the sky saddens with the gathered storm."

The poet of "The Seasons" was a close observer of natural phenomena, and no one described more lucidly than Thomson did the varying aspects of the year. But whenever the poet attempted the part of a natural philosopher he invariably failed. The lines quoted above are a fair example of that imperfect knowledge of science which Thomson possessed; indeed they may be said to exemplify the kind of information which was common amongst the educated classes at the commencement of the eighteenth century.

In the capacious womb of the clouds the vapory deluge does not lie to snow congealed, even in the utmost severity of a winter snow-storm. The retention of water-vapor in the air, and the condensation of it into clouds, or fog, or in its precipitation as dew, rain, hail, snow or hoar-frost, are processes very different from that which—even with the utmost practical license—can be understood by a vapory deluge to snow congealed. The lines which follow are however so true to nature that they must be quoted as an example of beautiful descriptive poetry, well adapted to be the motto to the present essay:

"Through the hushed air the whitening shower descends,
At first thin wavering; till at last the flakes
Fall broad and white and fast, dimming the day
With a continual flow. The cherished fields
Put on their winter robe of purest white."

It appears necessary, especially for the benefit of the younger class of our readers, who may be induced to give a little attention to the wonders of a snow-flake this winter, that the conditions, as far as they are known, under which water is disseminated through, and held suspended in the air, should be examined.

Around the earth, like "a great green serpent twining," we have the wilderness of waters called the sea. The ocean covers about three-fourths of the surface of the globe, or it occupies nearly 110,849,000 square British miles, and, equally over both sea and land, the vast atmospheric ocean flows. If we place perfectly dry air, contained in a bell-glass, over water, we shall find that water-vapor will rapidly ascend and diffuse itself through it—the quantity being regulated by the temperature of the apartment in which the experiment is made. At all temperatures, down to that at which water freezes, the air takes up water-vapor; and this process is facilitated by the constant movements of the sea and the currents of the atmosphere. Therefore, we learn that the envelope surrounding this earth is an atmosphere of permanently elastic fluid, mixed with aqueous vapor in constantly varying proportions, the variations being regulated by the temperature. Meteorologists have found it necessary to a clear understanding of the phenomena which are brought under their consideration, to study the conditions which would prevail if the atmospheric elastic fluid—air—existed in a perfectly dry state. The air does not derive much heat from the sun rays passing through it, but it is warmed by its contact with the earth; and this heat is conveyed from particle to particle—this process being known as convection, the act of carrying or conveying. The solar rays fell with different degrees of intensity on the equatorial and polar regions; we have in the former the maximum and in the latter the minimum of heat absorbed from the sun. As a particle of air becomes heated it expands, and becoming specially lighter than the particles above it, it ascends, giving place to the colder and heavier ones. Thus the heating power of the sun becomes the mainspring of all the motions of the atmosphere, and, indeed, of those of the ocean. From the lands under the equator an upward current of air is thus generated, and the space occupied by the air thus removed is supplied by currents of colder air flowing in from the poles. The aerial currents are complicated by the motion of the earth and by other conditions, which cannot be considered here. Sufficient for the present purpose that we understand that they are, in the main, the result of processes of heating and cooling which are regulated by an unvarying law.

The habitudes of an atmosphere of pure aqueous vapor have also been, necessarily, the subject of close and attentive study; but we have to consider only the habitudes of a gaseous atmosphere mixed with vapor, that vapor being derived from the oceanic waters in the first instance, and from the evaporation, which is constantly going on over the land, of the waters which have fallen from the air. Dr. Dalton discovered that the evaporation of water has the same limits in air as in a vacuum. Hence it is only necessary to know the quantity of vapor which rises into a vacuum at any particular temperature—the same quantity rises in air. Thus the vapor which rises into a vacuum at 80 deg. has a tension equal to one thirtieth of the usual tension of the air. Or, if water at 80 deg. be allowed to diffuse itself into dry air it increases its bulk by 1-30th if the air is free to expand, or it increases its tension by 1-30th if the air be confined. The spontaneous evaporation of water is therefore influenced by three circumstances. 1st. By the previous dryness of the air.—for the air will only, under any circumstances, hold a given, and now well-determined, quantity of moisture. 2d. By warmth—the higher the temperature the more considerable is the quantity of water-vapor which rises into an accessible space; therefore humid hot air contains a much greater portion of moisture than humid cold air. 3d. The evaporation of water is greatly accelerated by the constant removal of the air from its surface. Currents of air—winds—are favorable to evaporation, because each portion of air takes its quantity of water-vapor; it is removed, and another portion sweeps on to take its dose of humidity. The atmosphere may be regarded as a series of concentrated zones of air, each one having, according to its distance from the earth, its own density and its own temperature; therefore each zone will possess its peculiar capacity for water-vapor. Air, for example, may become saturated with water-vapor within a short distance of the surface of the land and sea, and remain perfectly transparent—free from cloud. This belt of air being warmer than the belt above it, rises; and as it parts with its warmth, which it will do by expanding as the pressure is diminished, and also by its contact with colder air, some of the vapor is condensed and clouds are formed.

It has been determined that over the land the cloud region varies from about three to five miles, but this is greatly influenced by the configuration of the land itself. Over the sea this region of vapor is more constant. Balloon ascents have shown that over England the cloud region has a thickness varying from 1,500 to 3,000 feet, and that the temperature at the top is not lower than it is at the bottom, notwithstanding its thickness.

The influences which effect—and are constantly disturbing the solution of water in air—its retention as invisible vapor, or its precipitation or condensation as visible vapor or cloud, are numerous; but if it be distinctly understood that these influences are dependent upon solar and terrestrial radiation it will suffice for the present purpose.

When a condensation of vapor takes place, if the temperature of the air be above 32 deg., the matter condensed is liquid, or in form of rain. If the drops of rain pass through a stratum of air, having a temperature below the freezing-point of water, they are frozen into ice, and form hail. If a band of humid air, having a temperature sufficiently high to maintain the vapor in its transparency, is brought into contact with a cold belt of air—that is, below the freezing point of water—the vapor is frozen as it is condensed, and each particle forms a spicula of ice, and these spiculæ combining form snow. When, by a reduction of temperature, a condensation of vapor takes place, a multitude of infinitely fine drops form a cloud, a mist or a fog. These minute particles of water descend very slowly through the air, and if they enter into a stratum of air—which, being warmer, has a capacity for imbibing vapor—they may be, and often are, rapidly re-absorbed, and the cloud which they produced may disappear.

ORANGE CONSERVE.—Take six large ripe oranges, strain the juice upon a pound of powdered sugar, and beat it up with a quarter of a pound of fresh butter. Mix them gradually with seven well-beaten eggs, stir the mixture hard, as in making cake, and when it is quite light and smooth put it into a porcelain kettle and simmer it over a slow fire, stirring it all the time until it becomes thick like honey. Put it warm into small jars with tight-fitting covers; seal them closely, and keep in a dry, cool place. This preserve is very nice as a substitute for the fresh fruit in making orange tartlets, puddings and sandwiches. Good brown sugar may be used instead of the white. For lemon conserve the receipt is the same, using only three or four lemons, and adding the yellow rind, grated, to the other ingredients.

A NORTH CAROLINA rebel was relating how "the Yanks" fired upon his company, while marching through a thick wood. They gladly obeyed an order to lie down, but there was nothing to shield them from the terrible volleys of the enemy. "Why didn't you get behind a tree?" asked a listener. "Tree," replied the rebel, "there wasn't trees enough for the officers."

CHINA CORRESPONDENCE.

BY REV. YOUNG J. ALLEN.

SHANGHAI, China, Jan. 7, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The Christmas and New Year's holidays have passed, and we have cleverly entered upon the new year. It is the custom in Shanghai, among the Americans in particular, to devote New Year's day to "calls." The ladies all expect it, and in compliance with the old Dutch custom, transferred here from New York, the gentlemen, with scarcely an exception, avail themselves of it to visit their lady friends, and thereby liquidate old scores and renew friendly relations for another year. The inattentions of the past are thereby atoned for, and the future friendship and good will of estimable friends secured. In a strange land like this, where we are all so far separated from our homes and loved ones, such courtesies constitute a delightful episode in our history, as well as a most pleasant introduction to the new year. Mrs. A. had the pleasure of entertaining about forty calls, while I received the congratulations of the season from about thirty Chinese Christians and literary gentlemen. (Inclosed I send you a Chinese visiting card.)

It is customary here also to spend the first week of the new year in prayer, which is denominated the "week of prayer."—Heretofore it has been held from house to house and confined almost exclusively to the missionary circle, but this year it was resolved to spend it at the most central foreign church in the community, and thereby allow all, both merchants and missionaries, the privilege of attending. The services began yesterday in Union Chapel. Most gracious influences usually attend these meetings, and results the most pleasing follow. All denominations come up to them—sects and prejudices are ignored, national and state lines repudiated. We meet as Christians, esteem each other as brethren, and together address our petitions to Him who is the God and Father of us all.

The heathen as yet have not learned of the great diversity which obtains among Christians in the West. They know of but two sects—the Romanists and Christians—and when they behold us thus unite, and see the harmony, peace and love which characterize the intercourse of the brethren, they never suspect the distraction and ill will which too often prevail among Christians in our respective native lands.—Christ prayed that we might "all be one, as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they may also be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." God forbid that we should ever by a sectarian spirit, in the presence of the heathen, cause them to doubt the holy origin of our faith, and turn away in unbelief, to perish in their sins.

The native Christians also had a called meeting of the various churches here, and resolved to unite with us in keeping the week of prayer.

The past year has been characterized by considerable persecution, but in nearly every case the wrath of our enemies hath redounded to the praise of God and the progress of our work. Perhaps if we had more of it our churches would thrive better.

Unusual success is reported from nearly all the stations along the coast. The number of native agents or evangelists has been greatly increased, and numerous cities in the interior are now being occupied as stations. "Forward" now seems to be the watch-word from Canton to Pekin.

Several consuls have interpreted the treaties as favorable, or at least not opposed, to missionary effort in the interior, distant from the treaty ports, and insist that missionaries have a right to occupy where they please. In consequence, attention is now being concentrated upon cities and towns hitherto unoccupied. The results are favorable, and a new era of progress seems now to be dawning upon us.

In the meantime a great number of new missionaries from England and America have arrived, and many others are on the way, to supply the pressing demand that now calls for more laborers in this vast field.

The church at home has long prayed for access to idolatrous China. Access, abundant and wide, is now extended. Is the church prepared to enter and realize it? I fear China is now far better prepared for the reception of the gospel than the church is to give it to her. We have the utmost liberty, and Christianity is free from proscription. Our chief obstacles at present arise not from the government nor from its missions, but from the native depravity of the human heart and the cumbrous growth of superstition which centuries have matured in the midst of the people. We are free to combat error with truth, and there are none who dare molest us or make us afraid. Surely under such circumstances we should now cease to pray for access, and go to work. Our prayers are answered. Let us therefore thank God and accept the answer with the obligations it entails.

Our mission is waiting with grievous impatience to hear the church say:

"Forget the paths already trod,
And onward urge thy way."

How much longer shall we be required to stand still? The return of many of our native church members to their homes in other cities opened up to us wonderful opportunities to follow them and introduce the gospel, but alas! our inability to move has lost, and is still losing, many of our finest opportunities for good.

My school closed the day before Christmas, and will not resume again till about March. I know not yet whether I shall be able to continue in charge. I much prefer being at liberty to devote my entire time to the regular mission work. But unless speedy remittances arrive I shall be compelled to accept the school for another year, provided I have the offer.

Thanks for another file of your excellent paper, just to hand, per Pacific mail.

Yours truly,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

SCIENTIFIC RASCALITY IN COMMERCE.—It is no longer a secret of the chemist's laboratory that clear, golden sirups can be made from starch and sulphuric acid; that delicious wines and brandies can be made from beet-root; that a barrel of peanuts can be transformed into excellent coffee; that lard can absorb an enormous quantity of water in certain conditions; that in fact there seems no limit to the adulterations that an intelligent and dishonest chemist can practice upon his fellow-men. All these marvels of chemical science have in these latter days become degraded into mere tricks of trade, and their chief beauty is in their capacity to enable unscrupulous dealers to lighten the pockets and destroy the stomachs of the confiding and consuming public. Concerning the article of champagne, a writer in the Portland (Maine) Star tells us that it is made from a thousand different substances—even from refined petroleum. Yes, from the fiery benzoles a sparkling, bubbling, foaming champagne can be produced which will delight the eye, tickle the palate, gladden the heart momentarily—but quicken our paces toward the graveyard. This is a new use for petroleum, which those who have been experimenting with it as an agency for generating steam little dreamed of. Who can say that the Pennsylvania oil territory, now considered mostly worthless, may not some day be regenerated into the great champagne-producing country of the world.—Cincinnati Journal of Commerce.

FROM WACO TO AUSTIN.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

The roads are smooth and firm and black and dustless and undulating, and the view grand. With a bright sky above, and a bracing atmosphere breathing over the rolling expanse of earth, the chest swells with deep inspirations, and you feel that mere existence is a luxury. Away to the left skirts the timber of the Brazos bottom—a river affording much rich land. Here and there are thin belts of timber following closely upon a ravine, or solitary live-oaks stand-ling sentinel, which the mirage and the imagination easily convert into grotesque shapes; moving herds of cattle and horses are hardly ever out of view. On our right come occasionally in view the "mountains," as they are called, though nowhere else would they be so dignified—a rough, gritty upland, which affords cedar for the farms and firewood, a refuge for the stock when northers blow, and sends out beautiful streams across the plains to the Brazos and its tributaries, and down to the sea. We keep this hilly region to our right for three days, sometimes coming within a mile or two of it, or nearer. Our road might be named the Piedmont road. We cross little and big Lavaca, (or Cow Bayou,) Elm Creek, Leon, Lampasas, Salado, and San Gabriel. Rivers, and streams of smaller note and name, before reaching the capital of the State. Here is land enough, it would seem, for everybody to have a homestead. So rich a soil they will not work through it in life, or be buried below it in death; and cheap—from 25 cents to $1 per acre. Settlements, as a general thing, are near the hills, for convenience to water and wood and to break off northers, and with limitless range in the rear; but houses and well-cultivated fields may be seen far out.

What would most farmers think of hauling rails to build their fences ten or fifteen miles? It is sometimes done here. Nor is this such a bad business. The owner of a cedar brake—of forty or a hundred acres of timber—at that distance can make a trip in two days, or less time. Selecting the season when roads are hard, a wagon will bring 200 rails, or more—as much as it can bear. The strong ox teams are no expense for feed. A cedar fence, once laid, is there for a generation. One was shown me on the Colorado, in good order, that had been built twenty-four years, and never reset. The best fences I have seen any where are on these prairies—straight, strong, and utterly defiant of stock. So the fire-wood is brought at idle times, which is the most of the time.

Speaking of cedar reminds me that the owner of a glade or brake, near a rising town, has a mine of wealth, so useful is that beautiful and durable wood for building. A friend told me a cedar house-log 16 feet long, and in size 5 inches from bark to bark, brought him 75 cents—the purchaser cutting and hauling; rafter-poles 15 cents, and so on. His two sons were then off at college, on this wise. He said to them: "Boys, the negroes are gone. You ought to be educated. You have lost valuable time. I have no money for you; but there's my cedar brake and my teams." The boys went to work, and in four months had $600 in gold. Noble young men, their education, fitting them for manhood's toil and responsibilities, begun and advanced largely before they got to college! They will be heard from. I would tell their names, but I observed, as my friend narrated this domestic affair of honor, his good wife (like a gentle Southern mother) gave him a half chiding look, which said, Now, father, why did you tell that on the dear boys?

I am satisfied that prairie lands will become an object to the white labor era, now setting in. Already the German farmers have decided it, and will pay $5 or even $10 per acre for prairie lands, of which a sod has not been broken, if convenient to their settlements; they stick to their settlements, and affect colonies.

Take land of the same fertility, or less, and less durability, that is timbered: how much labor in getting rid of the undergrowth, burning brush, girding trees and cutting them, and log-rolling—to be repeated for several years in succession; heavy and costly work, this. It is easier and cheaper to bring the wood you want to prairie land, and to remove the wood you don't want from timbered land. The superior adaptedness of the former to labor-saving machinery, for breaking up, planting, cultivating, and gathering the crop, is evident. No roots or stumps to dig out or break up, or wait on till they rot. The farmer, with his gang plow, may run a furrow all day long without a jolt. Mounted on the sulky cultivator, one man with a double team will do the work of two or three, with little fatigue. The patent reaper and mower would rejoice over these plains. Capable of sustaining a heavy population, those outlying wastes must, by and by, present a very different scene. These blank spaces will be filled up, and these solitary places be made glad, by human voices and habitations.

CATHOLICS IN CHINA.

The Roman Catholics have a large and flourishing mission at Chau Kiang. Just about the time of my visit one of the Reverend Fathers was going the "rounds," reclaiming and confirming those who had been lost during the rebellion. Within a few days, in that city, he had reconfirmed the startling number of eight thousand. In Nankin I visited their chapel, which was attended by a Shanghai native as priest in orders. He informed me that they had only succeeded in gathering a Sunday congregation to mass of about four hundred. They have large schools everywhere, and their funds seem to be inexhaustible, as if from spontaneous resources. A recent calculation by one of our ablest and best missionaries has established the otherwise incredible fact that the Chinese expend annually on their native purgatory, feasts to spirits, Ya Kyu, offerings for the dead, and their public All-Soul-pacifying processions, the astounding number of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. According to Chinese estimate there are eighty million families in the empire, each one of which, they say, spends on an average at least one dollar and a half in purely private devotions to their dead ancestors. Here, Mr. Editor, is the potent secret of Romish influence in China. They cannot denounce ancestral worship, and they do not wish to do so, farther than is necessary to conform it to a similar system in their own church, and it is by diverting this Rio de la Plata from its native sea into the gulf of Rome that gives them such an inexhaustible command of the resources of this people. Accommodating and zealous, what will they not do! Not content with the resources of the land, they not only sought, but actually have been made recognized officials, with power to govern their growing heritage. A bishop ranks with a governor, and an ordinary priest, foreign, with the magistrate of a third-class city. The poor Protestant, distanced and aghast, beholds from afar the gigantic strides of this Mother of Error. She will soon have accomplished the compass of the earth.

"Magna est veritas, et prævalebit" is a good motto, but uttered under such circumstances of disparagement, it sounds almost as much like the voice of despair as of faith. The latter, however, lays hold on the throne of the Immutable, and even though it be delayed till the bursting glories of the Apocalyptic vision, waits and expects judgment to come and God to vindicate his own eternal truth.—Rev. Y. J. Allen to Nashville Christian Advocate.

SUCCESSFUL SHIPMENT OF FRESH GRAPES TO THE EAST.—The Stockton Independent says: In November last George S. Harkness, of this city, packed a few bunches of grapes in tin boxes, hermetically sealed up in the same, and sent them, by G. S. Ralph, to friends at Jonesville, Hillsdale county, Michigan. Yesterday Mr. Harkness received a letter written by Mr. Ralph, under date of December 13th, 1867, in which the writer says: 'The grapes kept first rate. When I opened them they were fresh and nice. Be sure it made the eyes of the folks stick out to see them. I took the large can to your brother's. When I tell the truth about grapes in California, they think I am stretching facts a little—not a little, but a good deal; so I will have to reduce my stories so as to have them believe me.' The fact that grapes can be sent East, in good condition, has been satisfactorily demonstrated.

SULPHUROUS ACID IN SURGERY.—A writer in the Medical Times and Gazette says he has found sulphurous acid one of the best means for promoting the speedy union of parts which have been divided during surgical operations, and of great service when applied to wounds in general. He became convinced that an antagonism exists between sulphurous acid and pus, and the success which attended the application of the former in several cases which he cites as having come under his own notice, confirmed him in the belief that the existence of pus is not only an unnecessary but a preventable accident. Sulphurous acid is superior in efficiency to carbonic acid, and is free from the objections applicable to the latter.—American Artisan.

STAINS in marble caused by oil can be removed by applying common clay saturated with benzine. If the grease has remained long enough it will have become acidulated and may injure the polish, but the stain will be removed.

CITY MONEY.

Our friends are forwarding us considerable New Orleans city money, having no idea that this money has gone out of circulation as a general thing, and is worth twenty five per cent. less than greenbacks. We credit them accordingly. A three dollar city bill is worth only $2 25, if you can pass it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. L. DENNIS & Co., 99 Poydras street, cotton and Western produce commission merchants. Mr. D. is well known here and in St. Louis, and we can heartily recommend this house to all our friends.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST.—Our readers will notice a whole column of our paper taken up with the merits of this journal. We can for once say that a most extravagant looking statement is a true one. This is undoubtedly the cheapest paper we know of. It has in it every week three excellent engravings, a vast amount of original matter, and in its department is the highest authority we know. Every farmer ought to have a copy. It is published by Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, New York. Price $1 50 per annum.

WE shall never die. The limitless expansion of eternity is before us. We have plenty of time; plenty of eternity. He that believeth doth not make haste. He is careful. He is working "for the forever," like the old artist in the times of living Greece. What can not be accomplished to-day, by earnest, faithful toil may be done to-morrow

THE PRIDE OF LIFE.

It may improve us to imagine what must be the temper and mind of those exalted beings who live in the immediate presence of God. From the glimpse which the Scriptures give of that "innumerable company," their radiance, their swiftness and their power, we might suppose them often engaged in the contemplation of their own personal beauty, reach of understanding, and transcendent position of honor. We well know what we should think and feel if raised to such a nature and glory. We should be consumed with pride. The fate of those angels who became dizzy upon the heights of heaven with the thought of their own greatness would be our fate. Those who stand in the nearest rays of the Godhead feel themselves to be only media of the divine Light; they see not themselves for gazing upon the glory which passes through and through them. Every rich endowment of their being instantly refers itself back to the one only Source of good. Their highest thought is to "minister." In all that is said of them in the Scriptures we see not the slightest color of vaunting, though they are often employed to do the work of gods. Whether sent to guard the body of Moses, or to wipe the death-sweat from the brow of the Saviour, or to roll back the stone from his sepulchre, they are still the soul of humility. We do not recollect any exception to this characteristic of the holy angels.

Far different is it with that gifted though fallen angel, who embodies in himself so much of what men are, and of all that they wish to be. Possessing, it would seem, an inalienable right to the loftiest powers, he vaunts them in the presence of the Creator himself; as if not received, but self-evolved, he appropriates to his own glory that which was given him to enhance the glory of God. He is the Leviathan of pride. His success in the seduction of Adam increased that self-conceit which was already immeasurable. The first chapter of the first inspired book (Job) opens with the view of this dark-minded "angel of light" as he confronts heaven—"the accuser of our brethren." And in this wonderful epic the Almighty uses the arm of a single human being to defeat and humble this enemy of our race. We know that great successes afterward, through long periods of human history, revived this proud spirit. He seeks an early opportunity to measure powers with Jesus of Nazareth—the Son, as limited and conditioned by humanity. In this contest the impetuosity of Satan increases with each defeat, until his own nature stands out free of all disguise. He vaunts himself the master of all kingly resources, the possessor of a universal crown. Jesus, in the majesty of a pure manhood, refutes and repels this boaster, and in holy indignation places him beneath his feet.

This pride, that is so purely Satanic in its origin, "savors of the things that be of men." Alas! that we do not the rather imitate the unfallen than the fallen angels. Man seems overwhelmed with the affluence of the earth, the sky, the sea, the myriad-moving air, the floods of light, and thought, and sound, that are made tributary to him. The things he can handle, and wield, do and undo, the boundless good, the immeasurable evil, the waves of pleasure or pain that he can set in motion, intoxicate him with the thought of the fullness of his own life. All his powers of reason, his ideal-creatings, his volume of love or wrath, his raptures and sympathies, all conspire to exalt him in his own eyes, until he forgets the weakness that accompanies, surrounds, constrains and limits him to the condition of a mortal. It is as if he could not check the tremendous impulse which was given him when out of nothing he came into the world. The hand that made him is hidden from his sight, the ray that ought to lead his eye back to God, the source of his life, has been refracted; and he stands without seeing the whence, where, or whither of his being, as if he lived, but was never made. With this thought of life, and without the thought of its Creator, he swells; it constitutes his pride, his idol, his center—the ever-recurring consciousness of self. In this one universe of his own—what he has and is—he dwells. And in this "palace" "the strong man keeps his goods."

But a terrible defeat awaits this mind of self: either when in the region where all shall see as they are seen, or in this world under the convicting and demonstrating light of the Spirit of truth. A creature as wholly dependent as man must be instructed sooner or later in the folly of pride. The example of Christ, the beauty of the holy angels, the great lessons of an earthly Providence, the teachings of the word, and the direct influences of the Spirit equally conspire to that great design of the Almighty, "That he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man."

Vermilion Letters from China.

We were delighted to receive a vermilion card and a letter for the ADVOCATE, from the Rev. Young J. Allen, our missionary in China. He has been favoring the Nashville Christian Advocate with a highly interesting and instructive correspondence. We had begun to feel quite uneasy at being so immensely outstripped by that admirable sheet long ago. There was the powerful Doctor himself, at the helm, and Bishop McTyeire occasionally taking his watch, sometimes both of them at the wheel; then letters from Bishop Andrew, Bishop Wightman, Bishop Kavanaugh, Bishop Marvin, and in fact all the bishops—why it seemed as if the whole intellect of the church was pouring that way. But when added on to that there appeared letters from Dr. Sehon, letters from Dr. Green, letters from Dr. McFerrin, and the whole foreign missionary correspondence besides, we began to feel like the Queen of Sheba when she saw the lions that stood on the steps of Solomon's throne. Well, it is all very natural for wise and good people to go in squads; they like each other, develop each other, strengthen each other, and they stick to each other. As to instance: Johnson, Burke and Goldsmith; the Wesleys, Fletcher and Whitfield; Clarke, Benson, Watson and Bunting. Only let these intellectual princes remember the parable, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends," etc. Fortunate it was that we did not quite give over, for the tide seems to be turning. Bishop Andrew came to our relief last week, and cheered us mightily—and if he only knew how much, or we could find time, in a cosey letter, to tell him how much good he did our soul and body, we should feel quite sure of another from him shortly. And now here comes a delightful letter from one of our noble Southern missionaries. Well, we feel now like St. Paul did at the Three Taverns, and we shall venture hereafter to give these letters a heading after our own fancy, in the hope that many will follow, until we shall one day see a book published by our Nashville House, called "Vermilion Letters from China."

NEW BOOKS.

We have received from Messrs. Blelock & Co., Canal street, the following new publications:

PEN PHOTOGRAPH OF CHARLES DICKENS. Loring, Boston, 1868.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES, by C. Maringnault, of South Carolina. Blelock & Co., 450 Broome street, New York, 1868.

INTO THE LIGHT, or the Jewess. Loring, publisher, Boston, 1868 12mo.

This is after the ideal of the works of "Charlotte Elizabeth." It is written in elevated style and is full of pure sentiment. A very interesting story, admirably told, which will hold the attention and improve the heart of the reader.

REV. DR. SEHON.

The Baltimore Conference and the meeting of the Foreign Missionary Board both occurred in Baltimore during the first week of this month. We propose next week to give more of these interesting items. We learn by the Episcopal Methodist that our Missionary Secretary, the Rev. Dr. Sehon, has resigned, after twenty years' service, the most arduous post in the church. Few men possess the natural gifts of the Doctor, his noble presence, easy address, and inspiring tones. He is, when stirred, as able to command an audience as any preacher of the West. We recollect his first coming to Baltimore, and the crowds which attended him at old Light street. He gave us the first idea of the Western orator as a distinct class. His countenance had more life in it and diffused more through the audience than most men have in their sermons. During the General Conference here he flamed out in one glorious passage at the Conference Lovefeast, which swept everything before it, and revived in our thoughts that first grand impression. Like the noble Bascomb, and too many, alas! of our sons of thunder, the Doctor has had to struggle with the narrow income of a Methodist preacher, which in many instances increases with years its contractile power until it nearly presses the soul and fire out of a man. But we hope that the necessary leisure the Doctor may now have will enable him to right his bark, and spread a grander sail and have a more prosperous voyage than ever. We give the Doctor's letter in full:

RESIGNATION OF DR. SEHON.

BALTIMORE, March 4, 1868.

To the Board of Foreign Missions:

DEAR BRETHREN: I would beg leave respectfully to tender you my resignation as the secretary of this board, to take effect from the 1st of June next. Let me assure you that I am not impelled to this step by any want of interest in the great cause in which we are engaged.

The General Conference nor the Board, at the time of the creation of this office, did not conceive the great difficulty which now exists in collecting funds from the great pressure and universal want of money in our country. From this and cause all the benevolent institutions of our country suffer. None more so than the cause of missions, and especially that department of which you have control. I am anxious, therefore, if possible, to lessen the expenditures of the Board, and feel unwilling to continue in the receipt of the salary allowed me, after the close of the present quarter. The condition also of my private affairs imperiously demands more of my time and personal attention than I can possibly give and discharge the duties of this office, as I ought and as I desire. At no period of my history as missionary secretary have I been more anxious that the great work for which we labor should meet with that encouragement and success which it merits and its importance demands.

For near twenty years I have endeavored, to the best of my ability, to discharge the duties of this office; and it is with feelings of the most painful regret that I now return to you the trust with which the church has so long honored me. Official separation from you shall occasion in me no abatement of interest in our common desire to carry the Gospel to all who need its blessed influence and saving power.

I shall retire with the most cherished and grateful recollections of the former board, and the sincerest regard and affection for each member of the present board; and I hereby return you my thanks for the uniform kindness and friendship shown me.

Your's truly, E. W. SEHON.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM.—We call the attention of our readers to the card of this gentleman, which is renewed in our columns this week. New Orleans is greatly blessed in the number of its excellent physicians, and we believe that Dr. Bickham stands amongst the most eminent for skill in the profession. We have known him for a good while in the relation of a friend and family physician, and can commend him to those who need a medical adviser.

GEN. HANCOCK has been directed by the President to report in person at Washington, and left yesterday evening by the Jackson Railroad. It will be remembered that when Gen. Grant interfered with his appointments in this district he requested to be relieved, though it was understood that in consideration of the earnest desire of our people that he should remain in command here, the President concluded not to comply with that request. Since then, however, the condition of public affairs both here and at Washington is changed, and the presence of tried patriots, such as Gen. Hancock, at the Federal capital, may be considered a matter of paramount importance.—N. O. Times, March 18th.

DR. NEWMAN ON CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES.

The Black and White Constitution disfranchises certain parties for participation in the late rebellion:

1. "Those who held office, civil and military, for a year or more under the organization styled the Confederate States of America."

2. Those are disfranchised "who registered themselves as enemies of the United States."

3. "Those who acted as leaders of guerrilla bands during the late rebellion."

4. "Those who, in the advocacy of treason, wrote or published newspaper articles, or preached sermons during the late rebellion."

5. "Those who voted for or signed the ordinance of secession in any State."

None but those coming under these respective classifications are disfranchised; but are allowed to purge themselves of their disloyalty by subscribing and publishing a degrading recantation. Those who joined the Radicals before the close of the past year are ipso facto redeemed, as well as any persons who conscientiously regard themselves as supporters of reconstruction.

We notice that the fourth class gives especial pleasure to the president of the Thompson Biblical Institute of this city. In his last issue the Doctor says, "The Hon. Rufus Waples has placed the whole country under great obligations to him for including in his article on disfranchisement 'those who in the advocacy of treason preached sermons during the late rebellion,' and that this disfranchisement shall continue until such shall place on file in the office of Secretary of State 'a certificate setting forth that he acknowledges the rebellion to have been morally and politically wrong, and that he regrets any aid or comfort he may have given it.'"

After congratulating Mr. Waples for putting in a clause which possibly Mr. Waples might congratulate him for furnishing, he spreads out in a column of ordinary invective against "such ministers as Messrs. Palmer, Walker and Keener," but "trusts that Palmer and Walker will write their confession and be restored to citizenship under that government they have so ignominiously failed to destroy." With what sincerity he urges these gentlemen to become citizens the reader can estimate by the following choice extract. Speaking in this same paper of other rebels, the President of the Thompson Biblical says:

"As the negro cannot change his skin nor the spotted dog his spots, neither can these natural rebels change from disloyalty to loyalty. It is bred in their bones. We read of some devils who go not out but by prayer and fasting; * * * but as to the devil of secession, he refuses to go out because there is no swine filthy enough to receive him."

We think if the Doctor will get his friend, the Rev. Thomas W. Conway, to go with him and stand about, that it will supply the desideratum, and not require much fasting.

The Doctor need not go to the rebels for the illustration of his rough paraphrase. It can be found much nearer home. If the theological students of "The Thompson Biblical Institute" will apply to its eloquent president for a pew in his church, they will indeed find, notwithstanding the "Institute" and his avowed principles, that, practically, the "negro has not changed his skin, nor the spotted dog his spots." He sends the colored people out of the body of his church up into the organ-loft, but greatly admires that article of the Constitution which forces the children of whites and blacks to sit side by side in the public schools!

We are not surprised that his congregation in his new church has dwindled to eighty-five persons on a fair Sabbath morning, and that even the colored people and the military give him a wide berth. He attributes his thin audiences to the intensity of the rebel sentiment. He remembers the halcyon days of Butler and Sheridan, when he stood in Carondelet street church, in stolen plumes, under the great flag, and had a large congregation, when in the fullness of his zeal he cried out:

"And now let our neighbor suffer the word of exhortation. These are not the times for church controversies, but for mighty, constant action for the salvation of a lost world."

Since then things have greatly changed with him. But we think that it is a good sign when in so large a community a man who affects to be the politician is left to preach to empty seats.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Farmerville Circuit, La. Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Very little is known among the readers of the ADVOCATE of this pine woods region. In this immediate vicinity Methodism has scarcely a name. In the village of Farmerville the Baptists have the only house of worship. The Presbyterians and Episcopalians have no membership at all, while the Methodists have barely an organization at all. In the parish I suppose we have five hundred members. Very many of them take the New York Day Book, some the Metropolitan Record, and some the Lacrosse Democrat, but very few take the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—too poor for that! I could name a goodly number of Methodists in other communities who patronize such papers as the Day Book, the Record, and Democrat, but are too poor to subscribe for their church paper.

The first Quarterly Conference for this circuit was held in Farmerville on the 22d and 23d ult. Rev. Samuel Armstrong, P. E., was present. The congregations were unusually large for the place—very orderly and attentive. There were no accessions to the church. The Quarterly Conference licensed Joseph Lane Borden to preach. He is a young man of earnest piety, fine attainments, and gives promise of much usefulness. Rev. J. H. Stone, assigned to this circuit by the Annual Conference, failing to accept, the presiding elder has employed Rev. H. T. Lewis, the principal of the Farmerville Classical School, to supply the work as best he can without interference with his other engagements. The circuit has only a few appointments, though extending over most of the parish.

This is a hilly, broken country, abounding in fine streams of pure water; and though the soil is poor, the people manage to plant with no mean success. More attention is given to grain and stock raising than in the alluvial portions of the State, and there is therefore more independence among the people; and whether commission merchants "advance" or not, they are able to carry on their planting successfully. In this country of sand and hills a hand will cultivate easily double as much as in the swamp lands, so that what is lost in the quality of the soil is in a great measure made up by the quantity cultivated. The white population is largely in excess of the black, and from present indications the entire vote will be given in opposition to the Black and Tan Constitution whenever it is submitted for their approval.

Your's,
UNION PARISH.

THE CONSTITUTION.

REFUSAL OF CERTAIN MEMBERS TO SIGN THE PROSCRIPTIVE AND OPPRESSIVE INSTRUMENT.—RADICAL OBJECTIONS.

It was not to be expected that the Constitution framed by the Black and Tan Convention would receive the sanction of the enlightened citizens of this State, but it is something so totally unlooked for that the most powerful reasons against its ratification should come from certain members of that body, that we cannot conceal our astonishment. Messrs. Cooley, Dearing, Harrison and Ferguson not only refuse to sign that instrument, but have put forth a paper which cannot but open the eyes of the more considerate of the Radical party, and the folly of such legislation as that which characterized the so-called Reconstruction Convention of this State.—N. O. Times.

The following protest of Messrs. Cooley, Harrison, Dearing and Ferguson was ordered to be spread on the minutes:

I refuse to sign the Constitution adopted by the convention for the following reasons:

1. Article 13, of title 1, Bill of Rights, violates the rights of private property; and this, to do that which legislation has always failed to effect, viz: social equality, and a social equality which is abhorrent to all our traditions, and repugnant to the laws of nature.

That this violation of the rights of private property, for the above purpose, was deliberately designed and intended, is evident from the proceedings of the convention. Article 13 was hurriedly passed under the operation of the previous question, which prevented all amendments, so that, with a view of testing the sincerity of delegates who disclaim the intention of forcing social equality, I offered the following proviso to the article No. 14: "Provided, Nothing contained in article 13 shall be construed to give greater rights to any persons, of whatever race or color, than are now possessed by persons of the white race."

This proviso was almost unanimously voted down. Thus the colored delegates declared positively and emphatically that they were not satisfied for themselves with the rights now possessed by white men.

This article, so subversive of all the rights of property and designed to force such an unjust and unnatural equality, bears the number thirteen. It is hoped by the undersigned the usual misfortune which is said to attend that number may not fail when this Constitution is submitted to the people of Louisiana for ratification.

2. The Governor of the State, under this Constitution, is only required to be twenty-one years of age, and a resident of the State for two years preceding his election. I believe the chief magistrate of a great State like Louisiana should be more than a mere youth, and possess a better knowledge of its laws, traditions and necessities than can be acquired in the space of two years.

3. Contrary to the custom in every State, and therein following the example of the Constitution of 1864, the present Constitution allows the Lieutenant Governor a salary of three thousand dollars per annum for the performance of no other services than those of presiding officer of the Senate for sixty days! This is an unheard-of and extravagant waste of the moneys belonging to a people already ruined, and that, merely to gratify a set of vampires on the public treasury.

4. Article 75, in prescribing the qualifications of the judges of the Supreme Court, only requires that the lawyers appointed to that bench shall have practiced law for three years in the State. It is a notorious fact that our system of laws cannot be mastered in three years; and that in such a short space of time only a rudimentary knowledge of it can be acquired. This article was adopted with a view of filling our supreme bench with lawyers who have only recently been practicing in our State. These latter will be less competent at the end of three years' practice with us, than one who began the study of the law with our system, because during those three years they will have two very difficult tasks to perform: to learn a new system and forget an old one. The last bulwark for the security of titles in this State will be a bench totally unfit by previous education to understand, and consequently expound our laws.

5. The qualifications of practice for two years in this State, required by the district judges, by article 84, is not sufficient, and when I reflect that these judges are made elective by the people, who at the best are totally unqualified to appreciate the merits of a lawyer, I cannot help the conviction that such a system, with such qualifications required, will overthrow completely the object of a judiciary. In fact, the State will have judges, but not a judiciary.

6. The Constitution has adopted partially the old probate judge system, simply adding to the jurisdiction of our ancient parish judges some matters properly belonging to the ordinary civil jurisdiction of courts. But all successions are required to be opened and finally settled in the parish courts. (See Art. 87.) And for a court having to pass upon the most difficult questions under our laws, there relating to matters of successions, the judge is made elective by the people; and he is required to possess no qualification, except that he shall be a citizen of the United States. Even the nominal qualification of "learned in law" was stricken out. And I heard delegates say this was done to enable the freedmen to hold the place of parish judges.

7. Independently of the above specific and detailed objections, I have a general one to the whole judicial system established by this Constitution. I refer to the elective system adopted. The evil effects of that system have been too severely felt by the people of this State to permit me ever to consent to its re-establishment.

8. Article 99, regulating the exercise of the elective franchise and the right of holding office, is anti-republican, in direct conflict with the principles already established in the title of the "Bill of Rights," and will disfranchise a large class of the people of this State; and that class is composed of the very material which past events have proven to us we must draw from if we wish competent men to manage the affairs of State. The condition upon which they are offered the exercise of the elective franchise and the capacity to hold office is unjust, illiberal, ungenerous and humiliating, and unworthy of being considered as emanating from an American head and American heart.

9. The oath of office required by Art. 99 is simply an absurdity, and exhibits in its clearest light the total incapacity of the members of the convention to fulfill the mission confided to them. What security will the colored race have in the oath of an office if the Constitution which he himself has made does not afford it to them?

10. The system of public education adopted in the Constitution, Article 134, will defeat the ends proposed by its advocates; besides being unjust to the white people of the State, who will be called upon to pay ninety-nine one-hundredths part of the funds to carry it on. It is also another attempt to establish, by law, the social equality of all classes and colors. I believe the system will work irreparable injury to the colored race—because the whites will never mix with them or allow their children to go to the same schools—and without the help of the whites they cannot establish and carry on a system of public education.

11. Because by Art. 124 abolishing tacit mortgages for the future, as well as those existing in the past (the latter after a certain time,) the Constitution violates the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the divestiture of vested rights and the impairing of obligations. And also, because the same articles by requiring that every species of privilege, without any distinction whatever, and of whatever amount, shall be registered to be effectual, will cripple and paralyze commercial operations, and thus ruin the commercial industry of the State.

12. Because the schedule reports certain laws—and from these laws certain rights have already accured to private individuals; which repeal is a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

13. Because the ordinance attached to the Constitution is unjust and unfair—calculated to open every door to fraud and corruption—and merely intended to secure the election of certain parties to office, without consulting the general good.

Generally, I would state, I accepted a position in this body with a view of doing all the good I could for the people of this State, black and white, believing it best to accept the situation as I found it; and believing also, the freedmen of the State could be made to understand their best interests. I have been sadly deceived.

W. H. COOLEY,
Delegate from Point Coupee and West Baton Rouge.

We, the undersigned, concur in the reasons assigned by Judge Cooley for refusing to sign the Constitution, and adopt them as our reasons for refueing to sign the said Constitution.

By Rev. Dr. Keener, at Carondelet Street Church, on the 18th instant, in this city, Mr. WALTER L. KEIRN to Miss CLAUDE R. DURDEN, all of Mississippi.

By the Rev. Joseph D. Newsom, at the residence of the bride's father, on the 20th ult., Mr. W. C. CHATHAM, of Carrollton, to Miss NERRY CLOWER, of Holmes county, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

Died, of pneumonia, at his residence in Carroll county, Mississippi, November —, 1867, THOMAS J. STANFORD, in the fifty-seventh year of his age.

Brother Stanford joined the Methodist Episcopal Church early in life, but for his want of religious association he gave up for a time all claims to religion. After years of backsliding he returned to the church of his early choice, and together side by side with his wife presented himself a candidate for church membership, and during the last ten years of his life was a faithful member of the church of Christ. He was never a very active member—leading in the religious enterprises of the church—but was always steadfast and true to his profession, and was admired for his stability by those who knew him best. His death was as his life, quiet and peaceful.

JOS. D. NEWSOM.

MRS. EMMA, wife of A. M. Armstrong—formerly Miss Wright, of Greene county—was born at Livingston, Sumter county, Alabama, November 21, 1836, and died in Gainesville, Alabama, January 19, 1868.

Left without a mother at a tender age, she often referred with gratitude to the infinite kindness of her aunt, Mrs. Dorough, who embraced her at once by adoption. In this pious family her character was so carefully formed that, without being able to fix the time or place of conversion, she ever "adorned the doctrine of God, her Saviour, in all things." In religion she was settled, hopeful, without being demonstrative. Christianly endurance and cheerfulness were touchingly manifested in her last affliction. For weeks she suffered meekly, without complaining. In her character there were strength and tenderness, admirably fitting her for the relations of wife and mother. Her precious children, a little boy and girl, are too young to appreciate the solid goodness they have lost, while the husband alone is to bear the bitterness of his grief. From childhood she was a Methodist, and loved the courts and altars of the sanctuary. She felt that prayer was a necessity of her being, and in a life of singular devotion she leaves an example to her loved ones who follow on. She left no last words to record, but what is worth much more to the living—a good name, a precious memory, a saintly life. Of so earnest and pure a one it may be said: "She is not dead, but sleepeth."

Landreth's Warranted Garden Seeds.

PRIVATE FAMILIES WHO AIM to raise vegetables of the best quality only need not to be reminded that "figs do not grow on thistles," nor that from good seed alone can good vegetables be obtained.

Seeds may, indeed, grow freely enough, but unless they prove good in every respect it were better they had not grown at all. The seeds offered by us being mainly the produce of Bloomsdale, raised under our own personal supervision, with the aid of years of practical experience, we are enabled to speak with entire confidence as to their quality, and of the reasonable probability of satisfactory results.

☞ We have but few "Novelties" to offer. Our experience, obtained at some cost, is that out of the multitude of that class of vegetables advertised for sale, in most cases the good are not new, and the new are not good. Substantial, staple, well-known sorts are in the main the most reliable.

Purchasers who do not reside within ready access of the city, nor near merchants or druggists who vend our seeds, can be supplied by mail, postpaid. Priced Catalogues, for family use, with the Rural Register for 1868 (abounding in useful hints,) will be mailed, without charge, to all who apply enclosing a three-cent stamp. A QUESTION

and that includes

You, Reader!

LOOK AT THESE FIGURES!

2,800	in One Day
1,068	in One Day
2,164	in One Day
1,707	in One Day	that is,
2,030	in One Day
1,618	in One Day	21,312
2,617	in One Day
1,713	in One Day	in only 10 Days!
1,931	in One Day
2,070	in One Day
&c., &c., &c., &c.

EXPLANATION.

The above figures give the exact number of Subscribers received per day, for ten days past, by the publishers of the American Agriculturist, and the work has gone on in the same ratio for a long time. The circulation went up to 150,000 last year, and the subscriptions so far this year are very largely in excess of that or any previous year!

What Does it Mean?

Why, simply this, that the former readers, who have tried and proved the Agriculturist, are so convinced of its great value that they not only continue taking it for themselves, but induce their friends and neighbors to take it also.—Could there be any better evidence of its real value?

An Edition of 159,000

copies was required in 1867. At the rate of increase for a month past the subscription list of the American Agriculturist for 1868 will reach 200,000 to 250,000.

1,000,000 Copies,

at least, and probably 3,000,000 copies, would be wanted this year if everybody should take the Agriculturist who would be profited by its perusal, ten times the small cost.

The Truth Is,

nowhere else can you get so much real value for so little money as you find in the American Agriculturist—so much for yourself—so much for your wife—so much for your children—whether you live in the city, or in a village, or in the country—whether you be farmer, or gardener, or mechanic, or merchant, or minister, or lawyer, or whatever be your pursuit.

Of Engravings,

the Agriculturist contains a large number (350 to 400 in each volume,) the most beautiful and instructive published in any journal in this or any other country. The cost of the engravings alone exceeds Ten Thousand Dollars each year. They are finely executed, beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive. The engravings are alone worth a great many times the subscription price of the paper.

Of Original Information,

For the	HOUSEHOLD,
For the	CHILDREN,
For the	ORCHARD,
For the	GARDEN,
For the	FARM,
	&c., &c.,

the Agriculturist is packed brim-full. It is not a cheaply-gathered, scissors-and-paste-make-up of a paper, but the publishers employ a large force of the most intelligent and practical first-class men to be found in the country. These all devote their time and energy to gathering from every possible source just such information as the people need. It is their ambition and pride to print no line that is unreliable, and to condense the greatest possible amount of useful information into the least possible space. That they succeed in doing this is fully proved by the immense number of persons that continue year after year to take and read the American Agriculturist. It has now entered upon its Twenty-seventh year, and enjoys a circulation probably exceeding the combined circulation of all other rural periodicals, not only in this country, but in the world!

Reader,

You are invited to TRY the American Agriculturist for 1868. You will find it to pay, and pay well. It costs but $1 50 for the whole year, or four copies for $5. Its immense circulation divides the cost of editing, engravings, type setting, office expenses, etc., among so many that it can be supplied at this low rate. TRY IT!

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

"WHAT ARE YOU GOOD FOR?"

BY MRS. EMILY H. MILLER.

"What are you good for, my brave little man?
Answer that question for me if you can;
You with your fingers as white as a nun,
You with your ringlets as bright as the sun.
All the day long, with your busy contriving,
Into all mischief and fun you are driving.
See if your wise little noddle can tell
What you are good for?—now, ponder it well."

Over the carpet the dear little feet
Came with a patter to climb on my seat;
Two merry eyes, full of frolic and glee,
Under their lashes, looking up unto me;
Two little hands, pressing soft on my face,
Drew me down close in a loving embrace;
Two rosy lips gave the answer so true—
"Good to love you, mamma—good to love you."

THE HEAVENLY BEAUTY.

"Tu whit, tu whit, tu whoo! An owl out in broad daylight, as sure as you live!' cried Dick Perkins.

Poor little Mittie Williamson shrank back; how could she pass that group of teasing boys!

'Ah, ha! The sun blinds her eyes,' cried another of the boys, 'she can't see which way to steer. Allow me to present you with some spectacles,' he added, advancing with a pair of green goggles.

'Flat noses are handsome,' cried another, 'but not at present in fashion; these slate-pencils, now, might assist you in improving its shape.'

'Just wait a moment, ma'am, while I get a yard stick to measure your month,' added another.

'Oh, give me a lock of your most dazzling hair,' said still another, 'to light my cigar with. I've just used my last match.'

But Mittie was out of hearing now, having taken to her heels as soon as she had fairly passed the unmannerly boys.

'O, what a dreadful looking child I must be!' she kept saying to herself as she raced along. 'An owl—O, dear! Blind eyes—O, dear! Flat nose, and a mouth a yard long—and then my hair! O, dear, dear, dear!'

'Hey day! and what's the matter now?' cried cheery brother John, as Mittie's doleful face appeared in his room a few minutes after. 'Something terrible has happened, I know. Tell me quick! Is the house on fire? Or have you broken your arm? Or is father threatened with tic-doulonreux? Out with it, my dear!'

But Mittie didn't laugh, as John intended she should. She only took a low stool, and seating herself by his couch—he was a cripple—turned her face solemnly toward him, and said, 'There, John, look at me, and tell me what I look like.'

"Well, Mittie,' said John, after a careful survey, 'I really can't think at this moment. Something mournful; a widow at the grave of her third husband, perhaps, or 'Sorrowing Beauty,' or—'

"Now, John,' interrupted poor Mittie, 'you are only laughing; tell me truly, do I look like an owl?'

'Well, truly,' Mittie,' said John very kindly, for the tears were gathering in Mittie's eyes, 'I do not think you do. But tell me all about it, that's a dear,' he added, drawing her closer. 'You know I'm your confident, now Bessie Briggs has gone away.'

So into the ear of good, kind brother John, Mittie poured all her woes.

'Now, Mittie,' said John, when she had finished, 'we'll look this matter over calmly. We are certainly not a handsome family. Look at me; see my crooked nose, and my freckles, and my red hair. I am not handsome, am I?'

'Well, perhaps you are n't,' said Mittie slowly, after a long look, 'but you are the best brother I have in the world, if you are n't.'

Which he certainly was, for she had no other.

'And you like me just as well?'

'O, John,' cried Mittie, with her arms round his neck, 'like you!'

'The only one of our family,' continued John meditatively—he was used to Mittie's caresses—"that could lay any claim to beauty was our dear mother, Mittie. Perhaps others might not have thought her beautiful, but I did; and you have her smile, dear, so be comforted. But even she had a large mouth. Ah, I remember so well one day, when I was worrying about my looks, just as you are to-day. She came and leaned over the sofa where I lay, and smoothing my much-abused red hair, said, 'Well, John, what is it?'

'So I told her that I was such an ugly looking person that I wanted to choke myself.'

'Well, John,' said she kindly, 'I know this seems like a great trial to you.—I was troubled in the same way once myself.'

'You,' I cried. 'Why, mother, you are a perfect beauty!'

She smiled an amused smile when I said that, but that was all, and then she went on:

'At one time, John, I went to a fashionable city church. I used to worry then about my looks, and about my dress; and as there were many ladies in the church, far more lovely, and far more richly dressed, than I, my Sabbaths were often spent in real misery as I contrasted myself with them. One Sabbath, as I was about to enter the church, a poor little deformed girl pulled my dress.

'Can I go in there?' asked she.

'I looked at her a moment before I answered. Such a fright as she was, John; her back so crooked, her face so sallow, her clothes so poor, that I hesitated; but there was such an eager look in her poor sunken eyes that my good spirit came to my aid, and I said, 'Yes, dear, you can, come right along with me,' and I took her hand and led her into our pew. Such a look of delight came over her face as she gazed around the church, and took in one object of interest after another, that I was more than repaid for the slight sacrifice I had made.

'But the music seemed to be the chief charm; she sat and drank it in like so much elixir. I never should have known her face for the same one that looked up at me so piteously. They sang for the second hymn that one beginning, to a wondrously sweet tune. By that time I had forgotten to look at the child. A beautiful lady had just come in, and I was watching and envying her, when suddenly I felt a vigorous pull at my dress again: 'O listen!' whispered the poor child, the tears rolling down her cheeks. The choir was singing these words:

"And must this body die,"

"Arrayed in glorious grace
Shall these vile bodies shine;
And every shape, and every face,
Look heavenly and divine."

'I looked at the poor little deformed girl in amazement. Could it be that she understood those words, and was so deeply touched by the thought that her poor little 'vile body' should be 'arrayed in glorious grace,' or was it the sweet tune that so affected her? Whatever it was, she said no more, but sat perfectly quiet, apparently listening intently to the sermon, till the service was over. Then I said, for I must own I was curious, 'Did you like the hymn very much?'

'Yes'm,' said she quietly.

'Will you tell me why?" I asked as kindly as I could.

'I shall look like her, up there,' said she, pointing to the lovely lady.

'In heaven, do you mean?'

'Yes'm.'

'And are you hoping to go there?' I asked, wonderingly.

She fixed her large eyes full on my face. 'The Lord Jesus died for just such crooked ones as me,' said she. And before I could think what to say next she was gone. I had almost forgotten this circumstance, when over a year after, as I was walking out, I came upon a group collected on the sidewalk.

'What is it?' I asked of one of the people.

'A little hunchback run over and killed; would you like to see her, ma'am.'

I shrank back; but just at that moment they raised the body upon a litter to carry it away, and I saw it was the same little girl that went with me into the church a year before. And as I went on I found myself humming involuntarily—to the same sweet tune that the choir had sung a year before—the words:

"And every shape, and every face,
Look heavenly and divine."

And often, and often, afterward, I thought of that poor little deformed child, who had so early exchanged her crooked shape and wan little face for one heavenly and divine; and that sweet tune, and those beautiful words, were so much in my mind that at last I came to take them as a sort of watchword, so that when I found myself growing envious and wishing for earthly beauty, they would almost always help me to think that if I could gain that heavenly beauty, it would far excel any thing on earth.'

'That's the beauty she tried for, Mittie,' continued John, 'and now she is arrayed in glorious grace,' and I hope I've taken her watchword, and am trying, by following in the footsteps of my Master, to gain that same heavenly beauty. What if you should try with me, Mittie?'

'O, John,' said Mittie, 'I'll try!'

And so Mittie's ugly trial turned into a beautiful blessing.—Tracy Towne, in Advance.

ROBERT HALL, hearing some worldly-minded person object to family prayer as taking up too much time, said that what might seem a loss will be more than compensated by that spirit of order and regularity which the stated observance of this tends to produce. It serves as an edge and border, to preserve the web of life from unravelling. "The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked; but He blesseth the habitations of the righteous."

SATAN can never undo a man without his aid; but a man may easily undo himself without Satan.

FARM AND GARDEN.

WORK FOR MARCH.

OATS.

If the sowing of oats be made the first work for the plows the comparatively light labor will suit better the condition of the team. It is of very great advantage to have the crop sown early, and the earliest time should be taken for it that the ground may be found dry enough to work. A bushel and a half to two bushels of seed should be sown on ground prepared by last year's cultivation, and put in with a light furrow. If grass seed is to be sown, sow on the fresh turned ground, and unless it be in very good heart, sow with it a hundred weight per acre of some good superphosphate, and follow with the roller.

BARLEY.

Barley needs very much the same treatment as oats, and succeeds best on a rich, light loam. If the ground be not rich, it must be well manured with some good fertilizers. There is no danger to this crop of over-manuring, as the grain fills out well, even when the straw falls. It is a better crop to sow grass seeds with than oats.

CLOVER SEED ON WHEAT.

If clover seed have not been sown in February wait now until frost is out of the ground, and it is dry enough for the roller to operate. Sow when the ground is cracked upon the surface, and before it is dried too much with the March winds, and follow immediately with the roller.

TOBACCO SEEDS.

Let no time now be lost in getting tobacco seeds sown whenever the ground may be dry enough. After preparing and sowing, have the ground very firmly trod, and covered with oak or other open brush, which may remain until it becomes necessary to pick the grass from the beds.

PLOWING SOD LAND.

The great work of the season is plowing, and much of the success of the whole year's operations will depend on the thoroughness and completeness with which it is executed. The tobacco land should be first broken, and should be so well turned that the turf may be thrown down where it will not be reached again during the season. This rotting turf will be a source of moisture as well as nourishment for the crop during the driest summer weather. The corn field should be well turned, and immediate preparation of the surface follow, just preceding the planting. This matter of thorough preparation in advance of planting should not be overlooked.

The continual deepening of the surface mould should be kept constantly in mind in our regular plowings, as the object of every one should be the permanent improvement of his land. We should not be satisfied in an ordinary soil with less than seven inches, and should aim to approximate twelve. Soils which would make an exception to the rule of deep plowing at once should at any rate be gradually deepened. This exception is only in case of some deleterious principle, which needs exposure to the influence of the atmosphere, and in this case fall plowing is to be preferred.

We cannot overestimate the value of a good depth of soil, for our summer crops especially. In the case of the all-important corn crop, the firing and burning which so shortens the crop in a season of protracted drought would cease almost to harm it in a sufficient depth of mould.

Any well-turfed land, except of the very lightest kind, will need a three-horse team to break it well, and provision should be at once made for sufficient strength of team for doing the work effectually and in good time. Plows, gearing and every other requisite should be renewed or repaired, that the season's work be not delayed unnecessarily.

MANURES.

Manures of every description will command the attention of the farmer. Composts that have been unmoved a long time should be well turned. Carting out manures and spreading upon the ground where needed should be carried on at all convenient seasons. Commercial fertilizers that may be needed, including lime, plaster and ashes, should be procured and safely stored until needed. We need not urge the importance of the amplest supply that circumstances will allow.—American Farmer.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Gardener's Monthly says he tried six varieties of strawberries last season and found the Hovey's Seedling to produce the sweetest and highest flavored berry.

A LARGE deposit of phosphates has been discovered near Charleston, S. C., which it is believed is destined to add immensely to the wealth of that section, as it is said to be equal in value to Peruvian guano.

THE PERCHERON HORSE.

"It is well known that after the defeat of the famous Saracen chief Abderame by Charles Martel, on the plains of Vouille, there fell into the hands of the victors a magnificent cavalry, since more than 300,000 infidels were killed on that day, and the horses which they rode were, like themselves, from the East. Upon a division of the spoil a large number of these were assigned to the men of La Perche, of Orleannais, and Normandy, who composed the bulk of the French forces, and they must necessarily have left in their progeny indelible traces of their blood.

"La Perche, like all Christian countries, furnished, as is well known, her contingent of fighting men to the crusades, and the chronicles cite several Counts of Bellesmer, Mortagne and Nogent, barons and gentlemen of that province, who, with many of their vassals, made pilgrimages to the Holy Land.

"The Abbe Fset, in a letter addressed to the Congress of Mortagne, July 16, 1843, and in his great work upon La Perche, cites in this connection a Lord of Montdonblean, Geffroy IV., and Rotrou, Count of La Perche, as having brought back from Palestine several stallions, which were put to mares, the produce of which was most carefully preserved.

"The small number of the sires, their incomparable beauty and manifest superiority, must have led to the in-and-in breeding so much deprecated by breeders; but the qualities of the sires became indelibly fixed upon their progeny.*

"The Lord of Montdoubleau was, it is said, the most zealous of the advocates and breeders of the new blood, and being the most zealous, was the most successful; hence it is the Montdonbleau stock is to this day the best in Perche. The Count Roger, of Bellesmer, imported both Arabian and Spanish horses, as did Gorozc, the Lord of Saint Cerney, Conrville, and Courserdult; these are historical facts which have their importance. Like chronicles, it is true, exist for other provinces; for Limousin, for Navarre, for Auvergne (the land of noble horses,) also for Brittany and Maine, but in the latter not the least sign of Eastern blood is perceptible. The fact is the Crusaders from all the French provinces naturally brought back with them more or less of the Eastern blood, which they had learned to appreciate on the plains of Palestine—but the truth is, it has not been preserved there, and that we in La Perche should be so fortunate, after so many centuries, as to be able to show the traces of it, should stimulate us to its careful preservation.—Turf, Field and Farm.

CANDLEING EGGS.—This operation of looking through an egg by means of a candle placed behind it is called candleing an egg, by poulterers, who have taken advantage of its transparency in order to ascertain its soundness. From a mere trade practice it has risen to the dignity of a scientific manipulation, and a more perfect apparatus has been made for detecting the changes going on in the eggs, at different periods of incubation; also in assisting in researches on the formation of monstrosities by coating portions of the shell. Carbonnier's apparatus consisted of a hollow cylinder, in the centre of which was powerful light. The Bulletin de la Societe d'Acclimatation has lately published the description of another plan, which consists in a screen sliding in a groove cut in a block used as a pedestal. This screen, which is of wood, has a longitudinal slit in a vertical direction, behind which is a lamp, the light of which is imprisoned so as to fall on the egg placed in front of the slit. In large egg-hatching establishments eggs are generally candled on the tenth day of incubation.—American Farmer.

THE GUANO TRADE.—The imports of Peruvian guano at this port during the past year have again assumed the dimensions which characterized the trade in the article previous to the late war, and which during the continuance of the war was entirely lost to the city. During the year just closed 23 ships and barks arrived from the Chincha Islands, bringing 30,175 tons. There have also been received 1,320 tons from Bolivia, 9,083 tons from Navassa, 750 tons from Rodunda, and from other islands in the Atlantic 2,820 tons—in all 44,148 tons; besides we have received coastwise from Eastern ports an aggregate of 2,000 tons, chiefly Peruvian. Of Navassa, the imports are slightly in excess of the previous year. This article is used almost entirely in the manufacture of other fertilizers.—Baltimore Sun.

IN THE vicinity of Monroe, Mich., farmers and gardeners have planted, within three years, 37,000 grape vines.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field; collections at public meetings and anniversaries; Appropriations of the surplus funds of its Auxiliaries; the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free, a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the centre tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The principal feature of the market since our last issue is the increased movement in our leading staple, the sales of which have been on a very liberal scale, at fuller prices. Every other department has been characterized by continued dullness. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been trifling, and the movement in Western produce has been of the usual moderate extent, and principally confined to the jobbing trade. The excitement with regard to City Treasury notes has subsided. They have ceased to circulate as currency, and when taken in trade it is only at a discount approximating the ruling rates in the money market, or when nominally at par at enhanced prices for goods sufficient to cover the discount.—There is an unsurmountable repugnance among the people to return to these issues as a currency, and the city government will have the difficult problem to solve how to provide ways and means for its expenditures, and yet continue to receive its own obligations in payment of taxes.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed at 20 to 21c. for Ordinary, 22 to 22¼ for Good Ordinary, 22½ to 23 for Low Middling, 23½ for Middling, and 24 for Strict Middling, since which, with favorable accounts from Liverpool and anticipations of a further advance in that market, the demand has been unusually active, and prices have slightly improved. On Saturday the movement commenced with a manifestly better feeling, a more general inquiry, and at stiffer rates, but it was not until a later hour, after the receipt of the morning cables, that the demand was fully developed, buyers coming forward with unusual spirit, and, notwithstanding the advanced pretensions of factors, taking 11,400 bales at an advance of ¾ to 1c. per lb. on Friday's currency. On Monday operations were resumed with continued activity, and during the early part of the morning from 3,000 to 4,000 bales changed hands at a further advance of ¾c., when later news from Liverpool, not being up to public expectation, buyers refused to go on unless at easier prices, and the business for the rest of the day was at ¼c. less than the figures realized at its commencement. The sales at the same time were again on a liberal scale, amounting to 7,400 bales, the closing rates being 23¾ to 24c. for Low Middling, and 24¼ to 24¾ for Middling. On Tuesday the market opened inanimate, with only a limited inquiry, mostly at lower rates than factors were willing to accept, and, the subsequent accounts from Liverpool proving quite discouraging, the demand continued languid throughout the day, the business being confined to 3,000 bales, at figures indicating an average decline of ¼c. Prices, nevertheless, showed considerable irregularity, strict Low Middling selling as high as 24c., and Middling at 24¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,800 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 9,553 bales, against 11,589 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 2,036 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 504,660 bales, against 606,938 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 302,972 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 144,024 bales to Great Britain, of 54,290 to France, and of 120,013 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Good Ordinary	22½ to 23
Low Middling	23¾ to 23¾
Middling	24¼ to 24¾

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 83 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Coller's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the yeer 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Coller's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Coller can cure any case of Cancer

THE TYNG CENSURE.

A large audience of our church-going people assembled at the Church of the Transfiguration, in Twenty-ninth street, near Fifth avenue, March 14, to hear the public reprimand pronounced on Rev. Stephen Tyng, Jr. The facts in the case have already been published, and it remains only to describe the scenes at this sacred edifice yesterday.

About 11 o'clock the street in front of the church was filled with carriages, whose precious freight was deposited on the sidewalk fully one hour before the time named for the commencement of the "exercises," "performances," or whatever they may be called. The reverend pastor of the church evidently anticipated what he really had, a lively time, and took the precaution to have a posse of police present. These dignitaries, club in hand and hats on, preserved order so far as they had the right to interfere, but they failed to suppress the "titter" among the youthful portion of the assemblage while waiting for the reverend performers to commence. Little family parties took possession of the pews, and after seating themselves comfortably commenced a sort of "telegraphing" about the appearance of things in the church and the merits of the case generally. Some thought the eloquent young divine about to be reprimanded the most innocent of men, while others thought the dignity of the profession and the sacred name of the church required that it be so. Young people laughed and joked, to the evident disgust of mammas and papas, who looked solemn over their eye-glasses at what they deemed the ill timed levity of youth.

The middle aisle of the church was kept clear to about half its length. The end next the door was filled by a crowded throng, mostly men. After the hour thus spent had passed away, some six or seven solemn-looking clergymen, dressed in white gown with black trimmings, appeared on the altar. They quietly took their places on either side of the bishop of the diocese (Potter,) and knelt down to pray. This having been done, the bishop produced a large pile of manuscript with a black cover, from which he read with emphasis the "reprimand" delivered to the erring Tyng. Whenever he alluded to "the Methodist meeting house at New Brunswick" the greater portion of the audience indulged in suppressed laughter, while others treated it with a suppressed sneer. The bishop went on, however, in a clear, distinct tone, until he reached the concluding paragraph, which he read standing, as follows:

"And now the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight; through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

Before the last accents of the "Amen" had died out, in a nervous manner, Rev. Dr. Tyng, Sr., rose in one of the front pews to read a protest, the manuscript of which he held in his hand. The two first words — "Right Reverend"—had scarcely been uttered when the rector, Dr. Houghton, commenced a prayer.

Voices: "Don't shake him off."

Dr. Potter: "Go on, go on."

Dr. Houghton continued to read. [Hisses in a low tone.] The prayer was continued; the Rev. Tyngs both standing up in amazement at the ungenerous, if not unjust manner in which they had been "choked" off. Prayer having been over, the officiating clergy turned to leave the altar and go into the vestry. The crowd gathered around young Tyng. Some shook him warmly by the hand, others merely looked on. An effort was made to get him to speak, but the rector, who still remained, said he would not allow it. The excitement now became great. The police attempted to clear the aisle, but in vain. Loud words became louder. "Another meeting will be held," said one. "When and where?" asked another. "In —— Church," was the reply. The police again interfered. The reporters became excited, and rushed into the vestry for the names of those most prominent in the scene. Young Tyng became disgusted at the unseemly noise in a house devoted to the service of God, and cleared out. The two parties of which the congregation was composed, each disputed the right of the other to indulge in such proceedings. The organist at length came to the rescue, played something, nobody knows what, and drowned the noisy debate among the crowd. The work of the Metropolitans now became easy, and they did at length succeed in restoring order.

On the sidewalk the discussion about the merits and demerits of the proceedings was commenced, and little knots remained there talking the matter some time longer. Evidently the discussion has not yet reached its end, church canons and rules to the contrary notwithstanding. There were no blows struck.—New York News.

Mr. Justice McLean on the Case of McCardle.

The Radicals claim that their reconstruction acts, constituting military governments and military commissioners in the South, are justifiable upon the ground that the Southern States, being, as they affirm, mere conquered territory, are liable to be treated and governed at the pleasure of the conquetor. They deny that the prohibitions of power contained in the Constitution are operative, or that the guaranties of a trial by jury, and its accompanying safeguards, are applicable. If the Constitution in all its parts is applicable, it is perfectly plain that a naked military commission cannot be sustained.

On this point the opinion of a Republican judge may not be unworthy of attention. We refer to the opinion of Mr. Justice McLean—an opinion applauded to the echo by the Republican party. It will be seen that this jurist maintained that even in case of conquered territory the government set up by Congress must be agreeable to the Constitution. Hear what he says on this head:

"In organizing the government of a Territory, Congress is limited to means appropriate to the attainment of the constitutional object. No powers can be exercised which are prohibited by the Constitution, or which are contrary to its spirit; so that whether the object may be the protection of the persons and property of the purchasers of the public lands, or of communities who have been annexed to the Union by conquest or purchase, they are initiatory to the establishment of State governments, and no more power can be claimed or exercised than is necessary to the attainment of the end. This is the limitation of all the Federal powers."

Another opinion, given at the same time, and universally admired by the Republican party, was that of Mr. Justice Curtis.

After quoting Judge Marshall, to the effect that the "government possesses the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or treaty," Mr. Curtis says:

"And I add, it also possesses the power of governing it when acquired, not by resorting to supposititious powers, nowhere found described in the Constitution, but expressly granted in the authority to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States."

On the subject of limitation he remarks:

"In common with all the other legislative powers of Congress, it finds limits in the express prohibitions on Congress not to do certain things; that, in the exercise of the legislative power, Congress cannot pass an ex post facto or bill of attainder; and so in respect to each of the other prohibitions contained in the Constitution."

These citations are, we think, sufficient to meet this assumption of an unlimited power to deal with the Southern States on the plea that they are conquered territory. Even in that case the Constitution applies, and the reconstruction acts are void. These opinions, and that of Chief Justice Chase in the Milligan case, lay the axe at the root of the tree. They effectually dispose of these statutes, and settle the case of McCardle.—National Intelligencer.

BODILY PAIN is a chain, preventing easy or enlarged movement, and had weather a jail, closing the door against all egress.

But patience—patience that comes of Christian faith—transmutes the chain into the golden cord of a divinely-appointed lot, and the fettering into free submission, and converts the otherwise prison into the accepted abiding place.

This patience is the product and proclamation of the Lord's spirit, and where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

IT is announced that the financial embarrassments of the Illinois State University have forced the Board of Trustees to offer the grounds and buildings of the institution for sale.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

NO OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT REGARDING THE M'CARDLE CASE.—IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—The decision in the McCardle case goes over to next term by a vote of 6 to 2.

Ground of postponement—pending legislation affecting jurisdiction.

The defeat of the Arkansas Constitution is by actual votes cast against it.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—1 P. M.—Court about organizing. Routine, similar to that of last session, will occupy the next hour.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—There has been no official announcement regarding the intentions of the Supreme Court in the McCardle case.

In the original, Georgia vs. Grant et al., ordered that notice of motion for preliminary injunction be served on the parties, returnable before Friday next.

IMPEACHMENT SCENE.—More fashion in the galleries to-day. Confusion regarding procedure was almost painfully evident. Chase had his hands full restraining Howard, Drake and others from amending the motions of managers on either side, and, failing there, moving to table them. The effect of the President's answer was somewhat overwhelming.

Stanton's parroting the President in saying "public considerations of a high character induced him to retain his office," excited a quiet grin between Washburne, of Ill., and Schenck, of Ohio. The utmost gravity prevailed, the countenances of the impeachers evidently lengthening as the answer proceeded to its close.

The votes to-day indicated nothing beyond the desire of the Republicans to hurry the matter through. Republicans who are regarded as certain to vote finally according to evidence and law, voted against 30 days after replication.

The managers insist, mainly on the ground of public interest, that the unfortunate disagreement between the two branches may be removed, that the trial be pushed through, so that peace may be restored to the country.

Logan was spokesman of the managers to-day. His House style contrasted strangely with the quiet eloquence of the President's counsel.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The President's answer covers seven columns.

During the session, to-day, Butler apologized for inadvertently calling the Senate "Court." The President's counsel habitually say "Mr. Chief Justice" and "Court," the managers "Mr. President" and "Senate."

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The President has issued an order appointing Brevet Major Gen. Robert C. Buchanan to command the Fifth Military District, vice Hancock, relieved.

Gen. Buchanan will leave here directly to assume command. He was born in Maryland, appointed from the District of Columbia in July, 1830, and made Brevet Second Lieutenant in the 4th Infantry; appointed colonel 1st Infantry, February, 1864; breveted brigadier and major general, March, 1865. He resides and has been on duty here for some time.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The following is the general replication to the President's answer agreed upon by the Board of Managers of the House:

The House, having considered the answer and plea, reply that he is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, in manner and form as charged, anything in his answer to the contrary notwithstanding.

The House is ready to make this good when the Senate is ready to hear.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The House adopted the managers' replication—115 to 36.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Impeachment proceedings were very tame. Negroes are still entirely excluded from the galleries. The public proceedings occupied half an hour before and ten minutes after the two hours' private session, much to the dissatisfaction of the audience.

In private session Mr. Conkling moved an amendment to Mr. Johnson's motion for ten days, reducing the time to Monday next. The vote was 28 to 24. The Republicans who voted for more time were Anthony, Corbett, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Norton, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull and Van Winkle.

The veto of the bill muzzling the Supreme Court was considered in Cabinet to-day.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—In secret session of the Senate Johnson modified his motion, giving the President ten days by making the trial commence on the 2d of April.

Williams moved that the consideration of the application be postponed until managers had opened the case and submitted their evidence. Yeas, 9; nays, 42. Yeas—Anthony, Chandler, Dixon, Grimes, Harlan, Patterson, of Tennessee, and Williams.

Mr. Sumner moved that the Senate proceed with the trial from day to day, but withdrew the motion. The order was finally adopted as follows: That the Senate commence the trial on Monday, the 30th of March, and proceed therein with all convenient dispatch, under the rules of the Senate sitting for the trial of impeachment.

It is noticed that Wade don't vote.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—About fifty German emigrants of both sexes, brought to Baltimore by the Bremen Line, passed here, en route for their new homes in Virginia. They are to be followed by some ten thousand, who will seek homes in the South.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—In his veto of the bill muzzling the Supreme Court, the President says the same reasons which led him to approve the first section compel his disapproval of the second. The first section protects the right of property from erroneous decisions by inferior tribunals, and provides uniformity by appeals to the Supreme Court. The second section removes this protection, heretofore enjoyed, in questions involving liberty and life. He cannot assent to a measure which proposes to deprive any person restrained of his or her liberty in violation of the Constitution or of any treaty or law of the United States, from the right of appeal to the highest judicial authority known to our government. "To secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity" is one of the declared objects of the Federal Constitution. He objects strongly to the retroactive features of the second section, maintaining its inharmoniousness with the spirit and intention of the Constitution. He speaks of the Supreme Court as combining wisdom and impartiality to a greater degree than any other authority known under the Constitution. Any act which may be construed into an attempt to prevent or evade its decisions will be held by a large portion of the people as an admission of the unconstitutionality of the act on which its judgment may be forbidden or forestalled, and will check that willing acquiescence so necessary to the harmonious execution of the law. The President apologizes for his brevity, which want of time compels.

The Michigan Republican State Convention recommended General Grant for the Presidency. The resolutions strongly denounce the policy of President Johnson, indorse his impeachment, and say that Andrew Johnson has proved himself one of the greatest criminals of the age; and with devout thankfulness his time for further mischief is so short—in any event less than a year—we consign him to deliberate judgment, impartial history, to indignation of outraged humanity, and to the righteous retribution of that God who is the author of all rightful civil government.

LONDON, March 25.—The House of Commons passed the bill abolishing church rates.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Thaddeus Stevens declares that the public debt is $4,000,000,000, and admits that the whole financial management of the country is essentially corrupt and rotten.

Large amounts of duplicates have been already redeemed. So uncertain was the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that Stevens made his report independent and regardless of it. It is currently stated that these fraudulent bonds are afloat in large amounts in Europe, and are now floating upon that market.

Every facility has been afforded the perpetrators of these frauds, who are very generally and justly believed to be in close partnership with the chief managers of the public Treasury.

The following facts were taken from the suppressed reports of the Treasury Department.

NO RECORD KEPT OF PARTIALLY SPOILED IMPRESSIONS.

The chief of the Currency Printing Bureau, to whom have been regularly returned the partially spoiled impressions of bonds and notes, or bonds or coupons, as the case might be, has failed to keep a record of the partially spoiled impressions so delivered to him, and has not accounted for the perfect notes, bonds and coupons thereon, which in the aggregate must, at a moderate estimate, amount to a total of many millions of dollars, since not less than 1,000,000 of such sheets were returned to him. (Testimony of M., December 18, 1868.)

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS CONCEALED IN A CUPBOARD.

Ten thousand dollars in fractional currency were found stowed in the cupboard of the chief of the Currency Printing Bureau. This amount had been delivered to him some months before it was discovered, and he had failed to hand it over to the treasurer or otherwise account for it. (Affidavit of M.)

DISAPPEARANCE OF BANK NOTE PAPER.

Thirty thousand stripe, each capable of printing two notes of the denomination of one hundred, one thousand or five thousand dollars, clipped from the paper prepared for the first series of interest-bearing notes, and suffered to lie about the Printing Department until they mysteriously disappeared. These strips would print six millions, sixty millions or three hundred millions of dollars. (Testimony of G. G. & T., pages 2, 3 and 4.)

ALTERATION OF BOOKS.

In May, 1864, the chief of the Currency Printing Bureau caused his official books to be so altered as to show a liability to the government of two thousand dollars less than it actually was. (Testimony A., page 5.)

SQUANDERING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Two individuals in the Currency Printing Bureau have squandered some three hundred thousand dollars of the public moneys in furtherance of their private interests, while the same was ostensibly spent for public service. (Suppressed reports to Mr. Fessenden by a clerk specially charged with the investigation of the affair.)

DEFICIENCY OF FIFTY FOUR MILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

On the 26th of November, 1864, the chief of Currency Printing Bureau made a false return to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he failed to account for fifty-four millions of dollars of government securities that had been manufactured by him. (Testimony B., page 89.)

A DEFICIT OF SIXTY MILLIONS FRACTIONAL CURRENCY.

In addition to the fifty-four millions of bonds hereinbefore mentioned as unaccounted for, the accounts of the chief of the Currency Printing Bureau with the Treasurer showed a deficit in November, 1866, of sixty millions fractional currency.

ELECTROTYPING PLATES.

A bond plate was sent to New York, and suffered to remain there two weeks in the hands of an expert for the experimental purposes in electrotyping.

There were employed for weeks in the Treasury Department, at first surreptitiously, parties to experiment in the making of electrotype plates—duplicates of fractional currency, bonds, notes, etc. The name of the principal expert engaged in this business was not to be found on any official pay-roll in the department.

There were made in the department a variety of electrotyped plates—duplicates of the government plates of fractional currency, bonds, etc.—also the matrix or moulds of fractional currency, notes, bonds and coupons.

REDEMPTION OF DUPLICATE COUPONS FROM ORIGINAL PLATES.

Coupons from the original plates have, to the amount of millions of dollars, been presented and redeemed at the Treasury. The exact amount and the denominations of these duplicates may be readily ascertained upon investigation at the proper departments of the Treasury.

ISSUE OF EXTRA COUPONS, AND NO RECORD KEPT.

Extra coupons of the five-twenty bonds, third and fourth series, have been issued separate from the bonds, and no descriptive record ever made of them, thus rendering it easy to issue millions of duplicates of the same, and have them redeemed without detection; large amounts of duplicate seven-thirty coupons have already been redeemed by the Treasury, while their corresponding originals were never issued.

The duplicate coupons of 5 20 bonds and the 7-30s redeemed and sent to the registry are known to be from the original plates in the department.

IT has been legally decided in England that a stamped fac-simile of a signature bears the same value as the written one.

DISRAELI.

The political career of Mr. Disraeli thus far is one of the most extraordinary in English history. Of Jewish parentage, unaided by family, wealth and connections, he has by his own peerless genius confronted the sneers of the world heaped upon his race, and fought his way up, first to literary reputation, and then to political influence and power, until now he is at the head of the mightiest commercial nation on the face of the globe. His face is stamped with the impress of power, and his whole countenance indicates his towering ambition. His eyes seem ever fixed on some distant glittering height, and this ability and ambition, based on self-appreciation, exhaustless patience, and unflinching industry, must work out the grand result—world wide fame.

Mr. Disraeli never forgets—never allows others to forget—that he is of that race whence all our prophets came, and of which Jesus Christ himself was born. If we could imagine that face glowing with divine inspiration, as it is with intellectual power, we might fancy another Isaiah with lips touched by burning coals from God's altar. On one occasion, when taunted with being a descendant perhaps of the thief on the cross, he replied, in proud and soul-stirring words, "My blood thrills with the traditions of my race! My ancestors were lords of the tabernacle and princes in Israel when his were naked savages in the woods of northern Germany."

With aristocratic sympathies thus running back through kings, and princes, and patriarchs to the plains of Mesopotamia, it is not surprising that Mr. Disraeli should ally himself with the party supporting the royal prerogative, the conservative rather than the reforming party, in English politics. Yet so cautious, so sagacious, so clear-sighted a politician is he, that he makes just concessions enough to soothe the popular mind. Indeed, in 1839 he advocated the extension of suffrage to the whole body of the educated class, without regard to property. But this measure was defeated in the House of Commons.

Mr. Disraeli is one of the finest instances of the power of industry and preseverance in conquering the obstacles in the path of an aspirant for political honor and distinction. Four successive attempts to enter Parliament were failures, but on the fifth he achieved the great object of his ambition. His first speech called forth only laughter and ridicule in the House. He closed it with these famous words: "I have begun several times many things, and I have often succeeded at last. I shall sit down now, but the time will come when you will hear me." For two years he was silent, and when he again opened his mouth in Parliament his speech was listened to with attention, and he was warmly applauded for its ability.

In person Mr. Disraeli is of medium size, with intensely black eyes and glossy raven hair. He dresses with artistic elegance and perfection in the finest of velvet and broadcloth; gems of rare value adorn his person, and he never appears but in exquisite toilette. In public, the air of solitariness ever hangs about him.

Mr. Disraeli was born in London in 1805, and is the elder son of Isaac Disraeli, author of "Curiosities of Literature." He was educated at a private academy in London, and while very young became the clerk of an attorney, where he remained three years. Weary of this drudgery, and aspiring to higher position than he could hope for in the legal profession, through his father's distinguished friends he obtained admission into the best societies in London. Here he soon became a decided favorite on account of his personal beauty, his elegant manners, and his brilliancy in conversation. When nineteen he visited Germany, and on his return to England entered upon his literary career, which was remarkably brilliant and successful. Ambitious of political as well as literary renown, after repeated failures he at last obtained a seat in Parliament, and has gone on up, conquering one obstacle after another, until for years he has been the leader of the House of Commons and minister of finance in the English cabinet.—American Phrenological Journal.

"THE WONDER-WORKING WIRE."—Within three days after the delivery of the President's last message the editorial comments of the London Times were read in this country.

IN THY GOOD TIME.

BY C. F. H. PARKER.

In thy good time, dear Lord, in thy good time,
I shall find rest,
Far from the strife and tumult of the world,
In regions blest.

After the heat and turmoil of the day,
The quiet night,
With fragrant breeze, while silver stars look down
With softened light.

After the heat and burden of life's day,
The quiet grave;
Rest for the aching frame and aching head,
Where sweet flowers wave.

After the storm upon the billowy deep,
The gentle calm—
Fierce winds are hushed, and soothing gales steal down
Like healing balm.

After the storms upon life's billows deep
I shall find peace—
That blessed peace, in realms of holy joy
Where sorrows cease.

In patience, Lord, I wait for thy good time,
When thou wilt come
To take me to thy everlasting rest,
My heavenly home.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MILTON, March 11, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: In all communities the spirit of the people is judged of by the nature of the improvement made. A new bar-room lays the foundation for a harsh sentence, a new jail for the expression of a horror—a fear of criminal conduct. So of a new hotel, of commercial prosperity, new colleges, new academies and new churches, for a vigorous spiritual and intellectual advancement. Upon this principle we judge that the little railroad town of Pollard is on the advance to a more thorough state of civilization. In this town of about five hundred inhabitants, and twenty-two members of the M. E. Church South, you can see, east of the A. and F. Railroad, a new and neat little building, recently finished by that people as a house of worship for that God whom Paul declared to the Athenians. It is capable of accommodating about three hundred persons. Then upon this new church, neatly painted, there is a new bell, of as fine a tone as you hear in the great Crescent City; and on the stand lies a new Bible and hymn book—apocrypha, ritual and all—and all around are new lamps, "trimmed and burning," (when you come this way, stop and see, and preach,) giving as brilliant a light as you could wish; and, during service, a new congregation, well-behaved and intelligent. Now what does this mean but that Pollard is improving? Nothing new which you are sorry to see—but that which is so calculated to inspire hope of success and ultimate bliss.

But is this new church paid for? Yes, sir; paid for as all churches should be—before they are dedicated. What a blunder to dedicate a house to God upon which the carpenter holds a lien—dedicating to God the property of some one beside the one offering it in dedication.

True, Pollard did not do it at all; but the treasury of Mobile wealth opened to our assistance. The bell, the book, and some of the money came from them. Now this was truly a noble act—an appropriation to God. I think this is that kind of "scattering" that "maketh rich." May the Master give our friends in Mobile ten thousand for one!

Pollard has heretofore been embraced in the Escambia mission, Montgomery Conference, which, owing to the crippled condition of our finances, was left by the last Conference to be supplied. The supply was not made, or, if made, was not forthcoming, and a certain one of the Alexander Coppersmith sort, taking this as an indication of Providence, hurried down from the region of the North Star and proposed to take the church, house and all, under the cover of his loyal wings; but not without the usual list of falsehoods and slanders. But there being too much religious firmness there to allow the church to be so easily bent, and too much sense to allow any credit to the statements made in the absence of a preacher, the church called a meeting, and in that meeting the communicated proposition of the cold climate clergyman was submitted by one of the members, and the vote taken. Result: nays, all; ayes, none.

Here you see the result of the spirit of religious firmness, diffused there during the last year by Brother Carter. And as a further result, they now have a pastor, and are "clothed and in their right mind."

This church is in a prosperous condition, and I am inclined to think that it is owing, in part, at least, to the fact that the church is not in debt. All the churches within my knowledge that are in debt are in a torpid condition, and all that have gone to the Northern church, under my own knowledge, have gone there to get their debts paid. It is no wonder that one should pray to be preserved from poverty; but when wealth is used for purposes of aggression, as is the case with the world and worldly-minded churches, it is well for those troubled with the evil to pray for deliverance from riches. "Who will rise up with me against the evil doers, and who will stand up against the workers of iniquity?"

Your's truly,
J. A. PARKER.

JONESBORO', Ala., March 2, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have been with this people three years, amidst great affliction. They are a generous, noble people when they have the means; but, like many others, they have been reduced by the late war to poor people.—Once they were well off, and it is difficult for them to adapt themselves to the situation. I have been made to feel sorry for many of them often; but the Lord knoweth what is best.

We have just closed our first quarterly meeting. It was a refreshing time to all. Bro. W. L. Thompson, our presiding elder, was with us in the spirit of his Master, stirring up stewards and other officials in good style. The plans for the ensuing year are all on foot, with a lively prospect of success for the present year.

There is one thing I desire to mention through the columns of the ADVOCATE. It is this: how does it come to pass that Jasper district is a mission work?—a district composed of eleven appointments, and but three missions in it proper, and yet the presiding elder has to be sustained by the Missionary Society. Why is this?

I would suggest to the district stewards to assess the work to cover all expenses for the present year, and let every preacher take hold of the matter, and see if, by the aid of others, we cannot make Jasper district self-sustaining, and let our missionary money go where it ought to go—to liquidate our debt and sustain those fields that are unable to help themselves.

F. T. R.

A letter received from Rev. B. B. Ross says:

"Got $10 10 for China mission at Cotton Valley, on Sunday, by appointing five young ladies, on Saturday, at church meeting, to get twenty-five cents from each member on Smithson's plan. Will get $5 or $6 more there, and $50 on the circuit, mayhap. The young ladies did all the work in a few minutes on Sunday morning. This was the church (New Hope) where Charlie Hurt began to roll on the missionary ball, in 1851, that sent Belton to China and others to California—the year when Tuskegee circuit raised $2,925 for missions, and Enon circuit $2,950! Enon got ahead by the preacher in charge having Dr. N. B. Powell's carte blanche for any amount to get beyond Tuskegee in this good work. But enough."

Demoralising Influences in ths School Room.

The sense of boing invested with authority is apt to be accompanied by a feeling of self-satisfaction; hence, as the world is finding out, unchecked authority is dangerous. Having authority to do a deed, a man is likely to consult his own judgment finally as to the rightfulness of the deed; and the premises of his judgment are wont to be made up too much from his own feeling and too little from justice. The Golden Rule is a law that operates in communities of equals, where each can exercise force upon the others, rather than in communities where there is individual or class rule. The principle of justice that is in man develops into character under the chastening influences of a force from others that represses his tendencies to injustice, and welcomes his tendencies to do what is just. Apply those principles to the conditions of the school room. The teacher, says Mr. Abbott, must sustain in the school the position of a monarch. He does so in fact. Parents, commissioners, boards of education, the community, serve as a check only in extreme cases. And when a case is brought before them the teacher is, save in rare instances, formally protected and adjudged innocent.

The assumption, conscious or unconscious, that what the teacher pnrposes to be carried out, whether questioned or unquestioned by the pupils, is an example of egotism or a warning against it, which will either be imitated and will develop in the characters of the pupils, or else will be regarded by them with contempt. The latter condition is, especially, a fruitful source of disorder. Let a teacher lose the respect of his pupils, and his authority will be laughed at, save where he can excite fear. Thus the law of force becomes the law of the school. A teacher, in whom this sort of egotism is developed in considerable degree, will likely be observed to be boastful of his faculty of seeing in a good many places at once. The abuse of power has divested him of opportunity to trust to pupil honor. Pupils are the mice and he is the cat. If pupil honor remain, it will manifest itself as in the mouse toward its fellow mice. But pupil honor under such influences is quite likely to wane before the practice of pupil artifice. We might enumerate many other phases of demoralization which will ensue from this abuse of power alone.

Scenes are enacted in many school rooms which are of extremely demoralizing influence. Let us relate a few facts. A male teacher of a large school of little boys seized one of the number, the other day, and pulled him upon a table, face downward, and thrashed him, while the eyes of all the children were staring at the act. The deed was done with the unreasoning, sudden and violent fierceness of vengeance. Had one boy done it to another it would have brought the doer to a severe ordeal of lecturing and punishment. Had a big boy done it to the little boy the doer would have been called a bully. Had a man done it in the street he would have been called a brute. Vengeance, bullying, brutality, was the example. One day a lady came to us to ask if we would teach her two boys privately. They had been attending the public school, she said, and she had taken them away because they complained that the teacher, a man, was accustomed "to strike the boys' heads together." We were disposed to be incredulous until a fact came to light in another school. A young lady, who had just entered upon her work there as a teacher in the primary department, came home filled with indignation, and related the following: The principal, a man, was sitting at a desk writing. A glass partition separated the room from another, in which was a large class of small boys. Some of these boys moved from their seats about the floor. The teacher saw them through the partition, and sprang into the room. He seized two of the boys and "knocked their heads together, and then flung one of them hard against the wall." "He did it angrily," she added. Now, what must be the effect of such scenes upon the staring school? Want of self-control, absence of deliberation, lack of good judgment, anger, malice, brutality, are among the elements of the example—an example set by one the pupil is taught to look up to as a superior being, a model in all things—to one, almost, who cannot sin. Either the pupil will learn to do likewise, or will be so disgusted that he will learn little or nothing from such a teacher.

To enumerate other examples is unnecessary. Demoralizing influences are at work in many of our schools. Not in marked degrees in all. There are teachers who are characterized by calm, deliberate action—action which, though authoritative, is not arbitrary. From such we could learn. And there are teachers who would be thus, but are not. The existence of these demoralizing influences suggests the question of how they should be eliminated. The general answer is, let the teacher's authority be put more under check. How? Is the special inquiry. We reply, let parents, commissioners, boards, the community, yes, and let teachers too, recognize the principle that absolute authority in the individual is not trustworthy. Let more attention be given to reports from pupils of scenes similar to those we have related, and let no report pass without occasioning strict inquiry; and if the report be found to be true, let the teacher be formally convicted of it and exposed. Exposure is the great cure-all. Abuses grow where complaint is suppressed. Let teachers feel, in their sphere of duty among the young and weak, over whom they are set to rule, the force which men feel in their daily contact with men—the force of equal power in others demanding the acting out of the Golden Rule.—Whittemore Tufts.

From the British Honduras Colonist.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

CATTLE LANDING, Feb. 22, 1868.

MR. JAS. M. PUTNAM—Dear Sir: Knowing that there are reports derogatory to lands you represent, and also to you and others, who have published letters in reference to this colony, we take pleasure in stating that we have examined carefully much of the land lying between the Rivers Rio Grande and Moho, and find, in our estimation, one of the finest countries that can be imagined, affording more facilities for a planting community than we have ever seen anywhere else. We believe that a thousand families can find eligible sites and room on this tract for homesteads. We are informed that the Moho River has five feet six inches in low water, and seven feet in the rainy season on the bar at the mouth, and depth for any steamboat from the mouth to the first rapid, fifteen miles up. The Rio Grande has two feet six inches water on the bar in the dry season, and four in the wet, and good navigation for fifteen or twenty miles. Houses are being erected for the temporary use of emigrants, until they can locate on their homesteads, on the bay shore, at a beautiful location heretofore known as the "Cattle Landing," where there must be a town of considerable importance when the back-country is settled up. Here is the best landing place on the coast anywhere south of Deep River. A bluff of seven feet in height on the beach, rises thence until at a distance of about 100 feet back it attains an elevation of fifteen feet (where we have a lot for a warehouse for the use of settlers,) and for eight miles back there is now scarcely any water but such as is running in beautiful creeks, with rocky beds, and water clear as crystal and cool enough to be quite palatable. The location we have selected for a settlement is about four or five miles back of "Cattle Landing," between the Rio Grande and Moho Rivers, and is accessible by track-path over high rich country, possessing the superior advantage of available water communication all the year by both these rivers, and is withal in close proximity to mountains. Land is being surveyed for 27 families, some of whom are on the spot, and the rest are awaiting in Belize for preparations to be made for their reception here next week. A full party of engineers, running three transits, are now in the field under charge of J. E. Smith, C. E. One entire township between the Rio Grande and Moho Rivers is now nearly surveyed, and accompanied by full field notes. Surveys will also be made, without delay, of such lands as may, in future, be in demand. We would also state that we have seen but few bottle flies between those rivers, and very few sand flies, except on the sea-shore, and as to mosquitoes, we have seen more on one acre of ground in some of the woods in the United States than we have found on fifty here. The report has prevailed to some extent that all the land this side of the mountains is flat and swampy and overflowed; so far as we have examined, the above report is incorrect. It is true there is swampy land, and some of it overflowed, but the proportion is perhaps as small as any country where the coast is not mountain-bound. Some of us have examined some other portions of the colony, say Manatee, South Stann Creek, and between Middle River and Golden Stream, where we have seen some very good lands and very good settlements. Some of us arrived here during the prevalence of the cholera, and a portion of our emigrants suffered from the disease, and six died, but it has entirely subsided, and the present health of the country is equal to that of any we have ever seen. We are of opinion that there are fewer poisonous reptiles here than any new country we have ever known. In some places in this country there is an insect called "bottle fly," similar to the "buffalo gnat" of the States, that is very annoying in the day time, but does not stir after sunset. There is another insect called the "sand fly" that is very much like the small "black gnat" of the States, that is found mostly on the sea-shore; it is troublesome at night as well as day time, but it is believed here that when the vegetation is cleared away these things will abate. Messrs. Young, Toledo & Co. have donated lumber to floor a church, which will be built as soon as we can get our crops planted, when we will have facilities for religious worship, schools, etc., etc. In conclusion we take pleasure in saying that so far as our observation enables us to judge, the circular published by Mr. J. P. Harrison, of New Orleans, and yourself, does not in the least exaggerate the many advantages presented by British Honduras to an industrious and intelligent agricultural people.

A WONDERFUL FRENCH TOY.—"THE PROLIFIC TOP."—Toys are being much improved in France; there is now in a shop in the Boulevard des Italiens, Paris, a wonderful top for sale. It is called the Toupie prolifere, or "prolific top," and is extensively advertised in the French journals as "a real gem, a prodigious toy, full of surprises and bizarre transformations—in fact, a real fairy." This top is divided into seven parts, the chief or principal of which—the rotary apparatus—"absorbs" the others, and then casts them out animated with its spinning properties. This top swallows pieces of money, and spins on its head, its tail, its side, and on the edge of a saber. (Our readers will remember that this latter performance was effected by the Japanese troupe which performed in this city not long ago.) Another trick with this top is effected by spinning it on a mirror, which gives an interesting experiment in catoptrics. With this "physical phenomenon" are combined a number of mechanical contrivances for performing some astonishing tricks depending on the laws of equilibrium. The "prolific top" is the invention of M. Ferdinand Cauniere, 50 Gallery Vivienne, Paris.—N. Y. Sun.

SIR R. CARDEN lately, in sentencing a man named Louis Blanc, charged with smuggling tobacco, thought proper to say he was sorry the prisoner bore so distinguished a name, and to make an allusion, doubtless meant to be complimentary, to the great French refugee now living in England. The M. Louis Blanc wrote to Sir R. Carden, to state incidentally that he was not a smoker of tobacco, and to deprecate the allusion to himself. It has already borne its fruits. The Precurseur d'Anvers tells its small world that "Louis Blanc, French political refugee, has been condemned in London to a fine of 30*s.*, or, in default, fourteen days' imprisonment, for the offence of smuggling tobacco," and M. Louis Blanc has been obliged to write a second letter of explanation, this time to l'Independance Belge. The Star thinks that Sir Robert's ill success is another convincing proof that the language of compliment is not natural to the adult male of the British islands.

IN a few weeks the period will expire which Talleyrand stipulated in his will should elapse after his death before his memoirs were to be published. He died on the 17th of May, 1838, at his celebrated house, or rather palace, Rue St. Florentin, where he received Alexander of Russia. The world looks forward with impatience to the appearance of these volumes, as furnishing the key to much that history as yet has failed to elucidate of the revolutionary movement in France. Above one hundred portraits of celebrated revolutionists will be published with the memoirs, which will be edited either by the Academy of Moral and Political Science, or by the Academie des Belles Lettres.

ZOOLOGICAL CARGO.—A strange cargo lately arrived at Liverpool from Hamburg. It consisted of the largest elephant in Europe, weighing ten tons; two fine dromedaries, a gorilla, a cub lion, and other zoological specimens. The whole was valued at thirty-five thousand dollars.

ONE would suppose that Scotland would be the locality least likely to furnish volunteers to the papal army. Yet the first detachment of the volunteers from the United Kingdom to the papal army consisted of fifty Highlanders, forty-seven of whom were over six feet in height.

AN English paper notes a singular coincidence. The Edinburgh workmen's life-boat, stationed at Port Logan, N. B., saved on the 17th of December last, the crew, consisting of fifteen persons, from the barque Strathlevan, of Glasgow. On the 16th of December, 1866, when the life-boat was being exhibited in Glasgow, on the way to its station, the wife of the captain of the Straithlevan, accompanied by her children, went to see the boat, and put an offering into the subscription box. Exactly one year after, on the 16th December, 1867, the captain's vessel was wrecked, and on the following morning he and his men were providentially rescued by the very boat which his wife had contributed to support.

THE POPE, by a recent decree, has accorded to the Cisterclan monks, known by the name of Trappists, derived from that of the monastery where the illustrious De Rance effected his celebrated reform, a grant of the ancient and celebrated Abbey Delle Tre Fontana, at Rome, with the three churches belonging to it. Thus the Trappists recover possession of a convent of their order which the Cistercians occupied from 1140 to 1825, a space of 685 years.

A LEARNED shoeblack has recently turned up in the London police courts. He claims to be the son of a deceased Polish count named Maconski, and though only eleven years old, knows English, French and Polish perfectly, and is learning German. He had been employed as a shoeblack by the managers of the East-end Industrial school, but had absconded with his earnings and sold his uniform and the implements of his occupation.

TUNNEL UNDER THE INDUS.—The work of tunneling under this river at Attock commenced more than five years ago, and, afterward abandoned, has been resumed. The entire length of this railway tunnel will be 7,215 feet. Its greatest depth below the entrance will be one hundred and eighty-two, and the distance between the bed of the river and the roof of the tunnel twenty feet.

PHILADELPHIA SCHOOLS.—Of the total number of 142,547 children between the ages of six and eighteen within the city limits, 53.5 per cent. are in her public schools; 17.4 per cent. in private and parochial schools; 14.6 per cent. at work, and 14.5 per cent. in idleness. The children between six and eighteen are usually estimated at 18 per cent. of the whole, which would give for Philadelphia a total population of 784,000.

THE Paris Exhibition building, which so lately housed not only the art products of the world, but its principal potentates, and which cost eleven millions of francs, has been sold for one million ten thousand. The Emperor would willingly have allowed it to stand, but Marshal Niel wanted the ground for the reviewing of troops, and the building is to be taken down.

AN English lawyer has forsaken the gown and bar to invent and perfect a flying machine. He proposes "to convey passengers through the air by a steam bird, or a flying steam engine fitted with wings flapped by the action of steam." A patent has been taken out for this contrivance, but the machine is not yet ready to be put in operation.

THE mysterious disappearance of Mr. Speke, a brother of the explorer, is creating the greatest excitement in London, judging from the English papers of February the 8th. If the gentleman is alive, he owes it to speak out at once. As several hundred people are engaged in working up the case, the mystery will probably be explained before long.

NAPOLEON AND THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—A deputation from the English Bible Society had an audience with the Emperor Napoleon recently, and presented him with a copy of the Bible. The Emperor made a brief address to the gentlemen of the deputation, in which he declared that it was his first rule to protect all religions.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NO. VIII.—PROPHECY.

Prophecy has been called a monumental miracle. Miracles which consist in sudden suspensions, deviations from or controlments of natural laws, are confined to a brief period of time and to a limited locality; but prophetic miracles extend over centuries, and empires and continents. Prophecy embraces a wide range of subjects, and runs as warp through the woof of all history, from Adam in the garden to ourselves, on whom the ends of the world have come. Individuals, cities, races, empires and religions are its themes, and to this may be added the end of time, the general judgment, and final destiny of the virtuous and the vile.

The force of prophetic evidence consists in this, that no uninspired sagacity can foretell events that depend upon the human will for their fulfillment. Seasons, tides, eclipses, and like events, that are the result of the regular operation of natural laws, may be foretold upon the hypothesis that nature and its laws will continue unchanged. But events that depend for their execution upon human agency cannot be certainly foretold by any intelligence but that which sees the end from the beginning. From historical analogies and precedents we may guess and assume that history will repeat itself, and that what has been will be; but there is no certainty, and not the slightest foresight as to details. If, then, it can be shown that future and far distant and most surprising events, embracing a great variety of subjects, were foreseen and predicted not only as comprehensive results, but in their most minute details, we prove that those who wrote these predictions wrote them under the immediate influence of divine inspiration, and consequently establish the claim of the Bible to be a revelation from God.

We shall, out of a multitude of prophecies, select only two as sufficient for our purpose—the prophecies in relation to the Jews, which we shall just now consider, and the prophecies in relation to Christ, which must be the subject of our next article.

While the Jews were yet in the Arabian wilderness, between Egypt and Canaan, before they came into possession of the land which had been promised four centuries previous, and before they were properly a kingdom at all, Moses foretold the various wonderful and terrible destiny that awaited them as a nation, as a sad retributive consequence of their wicked forgetfulness of God. Many of these predictions in relation to the calamities, defeats and captivities were fulfilled, in a measure, by the invasions of the Egyptian, the Syrian and Assyrian kings. The ten tribes composing the kingdom of Israel, as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah, were carried into captivity by Shalmanesor, king of Assyria, 254 years after its separation from the kingdom of Judah. About 134 years after the captivity of Israel, Judah was carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; this captivity continued 70 years. All the particulars of these invasions and captivities were clearly and minutely foretold. We shall, however, confine ourselves to a consideration of those prophecies that were made by Moses 1,500 years in advance of their fulfillment. These prophecies are recorded in the 28th chapter of the book of Deuteronomy, and their fulfillment may be found in Josephus Tacitus, and in all modern history.

In regard to the final invasion and overthrow of their kingdom, and the destruction of their capital, Moses predicts, in the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, that the nation that was to do this thing was to be "from afar." Italy was distant from Judea, and a portion of the legionaries employed in the siege of Jerusalem were brought by Vespasian from Britain, the utmost western limit of the Roman empire.

Further, this invading and conquering people were to come "swift as the eagle flyeth." These people came in ships, and the emblem on all the Roman standards was an eagle, to express the swiftness of their conquering march. "A nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand." The Latin language was utterly unknown to the Jews. This nation was to be of "fierce countenance." No soldiers were bolder or grimmer than the iron-clad legionaries of Rome. When Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, saw the grim and undaunted faces of the Roman warriors, as they lay dead upon the field of dreadful fight, he was so impressed with their warlike look that he exclaimed: "Oh, that these men were my soldiers, or I were their king." Moses predicted that this nation would utterly destroy them, and so they did. All the towns of Galilee were laid in ruins; then Jerusalem was last invested. Moses predicted that in the soreness and straitness of the siege tender and delicate women, in the ungovernable rage of hunger, would feed upon the bodies of their own children, and so authentic history tells us they did. Moses tells them they would be destroyed until "few in number." During this last invasion and memorable siege 1,200,000 perished by pestilence, famine and the sword. In the reign of the Emperor Trajan, about A. D. 100, multitudes of Jews were destroyed. In A. D. 130 the armies of the Emperor Adrian massacred vast numbers, and utterly scattered and broke them.

Moses predicted that they should be carried in ships into Egypt and sold into bondage, "until no man would buy them." So it was. Ninety thousand were carried thus into Egypt, until the slave market was glutted, and none found to purchase. Moses told them they should "be plucked from off the land" which they were then going to possess. This has been steadily fulfilling for 1,800 years. The Romans, the Saracens, the Christians and the Turks have held and ruled Judea from the days of the conquering Titus until now, and the Jews have never since had a distinct national polity.

Moses told them they should be "scattered among all people."—This wonderful prediction has been most wonderfully fulfilled. The Jew inhabits all large islands, all continents, all zones—lives in all climates, speaks all languages. He is found from the poles to the burning line, from China to Britain, from Canada to California, from Labrador to La Plata, from Spitzbergen to the Cape of Good Hope—wherever the earth bears a plant. Moses tells them that they should find no rest for the soles of their feet, their hearts fearful, and their lives hanging in doubt, everywhere oppressed and wronged. The fulfillment of these wonderful predictions embraces a wide range of history, no inconsiderable part of it for 1,800 years past. The heathen nations, the Mohammedan, and the so-called Christian nations have united to oppress and wrong these unhappy people. They have been oppressively taxed, their goods have been confiscated, they have been incarcerated in dungeons, they have been banished from every nation in Europe, and from some several times over. The Crusades—those blind wars of fanaticism—resulted in the murder of countless thousands.—The fanatical and rapacious populace of every land have outraged and insulted the "tribes of the wandering foot and weary breast."—Tyrannical laws in nearly all lands have denied to them citizenship and civil rights. Yet, after all, in accordance with prophecies, they have been wonderfully preserved—like the bush on fire, but never consumed. Assyria, Persia, Greece and Rome have passed away; and while no modern people can trace their ancestry, no one doubts the Jews around us are the descendants of Abraham.

COST OF GOVERNMENT.—The expenses of the government, the present year, according to Secretary McCulloch's report, is $346,729,129, and his estimate for 1868, $392,269,226. This last sum will be, if divided evenly, eighty dollars for every voter in the country.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

MR. EDITOR: Of late my mind has been variously exercised in reference to some plan by which the minutes of our Conferences can be published and circulated. This exercise was partly superinduced by the reception, a few days since, of only eight copies of the minutes of the Montgomery Conference to distribute among six churches. However, this was the best our worthy secretary could do with the money placed in his hands for this purpose. How to dispose of the few copies to the best advantage was a question. At last I decided to furnish the preachers and stewards as well as I could. The distribution was gratis, notwithstanding the money was paid in the outset by the writer, and I knew not how to commence selling so few copies.—Whilst traversing my field of labor I have been presenting the subject to the members of our church, and find all willing and anxious to pay enough beforehand to insure a copy, which, at the present price of publishing and mailing, will amount to about fifteen cents per copy.

In order to secure a larger publication and wider circulation of our minutes let the following items be observed: 1. Before the preacher of each charge leaves his work to attend the session of the Annual Conference let him present the subject to the members of the church, and all others concerned, and receive fifteen cents from each one desiring a copy of the minutes. 2. Let the preacher prepare a list, embracing the names and amounts of all who subscribe to this fund, which will guide him or his successor in distributing the minutes. 3. At the Conference let a committee be appointed for the purpose of receiving the number of subscribers and amounts paid from each charge, and turn both over to the secretary, or some one designated by the Conference. 4. As soon after the Conference session as convenient let the secretary have the minutes published, and mail the requisite number to each charge in the Conference—the post office in each charge, or the nearest thereto, having been furnished with the money and number of subscribers. Thus all can soon obtain the official reports of the Annual Conference, and thus a correct history of our operations and statistics will be secured to our membership.

The above is written more in the desire of awakening interest upon this subject than of prescribing any specific mode of operating.

GUIZOT.—We have studied the works of this distinguished man, but are indebted for our first knowledge of his personal character and history to a sketch in the Watchman and Reflector, from Rev. E. de Pressence, D.D. From it we condense the following items: Guizot's father was beheaded during the reign of terror; but he was carefully trained by his pious and intelligent mother. He made his debut as a tutor in Paris. "He published several articles in the papers, which attracted some attention. There he met Miss Menlan, a young lady of rare worth and great distinction, who supported her family by her pen. In this task M. Guizot aided her in the most delicate manner, sending articles under her name to the journals in which she used to write. Some years later she became his wife. He is small in stature but noble in appearance." He has always been an early riser and an indefatigable worker, and though now eighty, is enthusiastic as ever. He lives at a beautiful country home, surrounded by his loving and admiring children and grandchildren. He is almost as famous for his oratory as for his writing. Best of all, Guizot is an earnest champion of the religion of Jesus.

THE MICROSCOPE IN EDUCATION.

Assuming that scientific instruction is to form an essential portion of the education of the future, the possession of at least a moderate quantity of philosophical apparatus will be regarded as necessary by all families raised sufficiently above want to afford its purchase, and the most popular and available instrument is assuredly a microscope, from the range of information it is able to impart, and from the continuous pleasure so easily procurable from its use.

In the selection of such an instrument, regard of course must be had to the state of the intended purchaser's pocket; but it may save loss of money and vexation of spirit if we caution those who are about to enter upon microscopic pursuits, not to imagine that the lowest-priced instruments can possibly prove satisfactory. A microscope that will not show all ordinary objects well, bringing out their beauty, as well as their structure, will soon be voted a tiresome and unsatisfactory machine. Only advanced students can make any good use of the refinements of the most costly instruments, and of the most elaborate apparatus, but if only three or four pounds is given for a microscope with a couple of powers, a bull's-eye condenser, and a few et ceteras, it will infallibly be found insufficient and inconvenient within six months of its acquisition, if it is kept in constant use.

Families should not too readily grudge the price of a good instrument, as it will last their lives; and it is not a little barbarous and absurd to find costly finery in a house destitute of appliances for the cultivation of the mind.

Let us suppose a microscope bought—what is to be done with it? Here we fall back upon the tendency of the times toward scientific education. Every one ought, for example, to know some at least of the elementary truths of anatomy and physiology. Foolish people fancy that such matters are only fit for those who may be destined for medical pursuits; but every one is interested in the preservation of health, and it is absurd that society should bring up men and women entirely ignorant of the nature of the human frame. Even a baby may be regarded as a complicated piece of philosophical apparatus, which it is folly to commit to the charge of a curator who has not the remotest idea of how it goes.

With the aid of a microscope, and a few well-selected preparations, sound elementary knowledge of the nature of bones, muscles, nerves, lungs, skin, etc., may be easily and very agreeably obtained, and the ideas thus communicated will not only enlarge the mind, but furnish useful hints for practical conduct all through life. It will be found that when objects of the kind referred to are seen, books relating to them will become interesting, although they might prove most wearisome to plod through without such aid.

When once the simpler elements of physiology have been mastered, a multiplicity of objects in the lower ranks of organic life become of great interest. Portions of insects, exemplifying the means by which they are enabled to do something like what man does with a different apparatus, in the way of locomotion, food catching, digestion, etc., rise in value as objects of study or amusement just in proportion to the range of physical or physiological knowledge previously acquired.

It will be conceded by all acquainted with the matter that a course of microscopic instruction of the kind indicated should be regarded as an indispensable feature in every civilized educational scheme.

Passing from the animal to the vegetable kingdom, a great deal of important information, furnishing food for reflection, may be obtained, by directing the microscope to readily accessible plants. Those who do not intend to study botany as a science ought yet to know the appearance and functions of the principal organs by which plant-life is carried on. Stamens, pistils, pollen, vessels of different descriptions, seeds, tissues, and cells of plants, ought to be familiar things to all who have any pretence to education, and though mere reading about may be perplexing and wearisome, seeing them properly exhibited under the microscope rarely fails to instruct and delight.

The vegetable world offers an endless succession of beautiful microscopic objects, and their dissection involves no unpleasant processes or disagreeable tasks. To know plants only as they appear to the unassisted eye is to have but a slight and feeble acquaintance with their larger varieties only, for multitudes of the most exquisite forms of vegetation can only be seen by the microscope's aid. In the green slime or scum upon stones or ponds, in moulds, mildews, etc., what elegant shapes and charming tints appear; and what astonishment seizes the mind when the eye first sees undoubted plants move about and change their shapes like the Euglenæ, as if stimulated by a purpose and impelled by a will.

If the microscope is used simply as a plaything, it soon meets with the fate of other playthings, is being thrown aside. More rationally employed, it provides a constant stimulus to inquiry. The observer finds his curiosity excited first in one direction and then in another. To explain one thing he wants to know a little chemistry, to understand another a little physiology, and so forth from day to day.

When the microscope is merely made to serve the purpose of an elegant amusement it is by no means to be despised, nor ought those who so employ it to be ridiculed for their taste. Looked at from a recreational point of view, microscopy is well worth taking up, though we certainly advise its employment in a more studious spirit, and in a systematic way. Indeed, the more it has been used for study, the more it may be used for amusement, because the observer, who has acquired an extensive range of information, will be much better qualified to develop its recreational capacities than can possibly be effected by a comparatively uninstructed practitioner.

Fresh objects will, as a rule, be more interesting than slides, and living ones are preferable to dead; but there are many things, such as details of structure, that can only be seen in well-made preparations; and any one who buys a microscope should learn how to prepare all ordinary slides, for which abundant instructions are given in well-known works.

In families much interest is easily excited by illustrations of the structure of ordinary things in regular use, and but little skill is required to make thin slices, sections, and other preparations necessary for their display. A little practice will easily lead to the discovery of the powers and modes of illumination best employed. It is best to begin with the lower powers, and though an object may be transparent enough for transmitted illumination, it is often worth trying it also by reflected light. Bodies, again, that are opaque in a mass become translucent in their sections, and many which present no beauty with ordinary illumination become splendid with polarized light.

We shall, from time to time, furnish beginners with information which will assist them in microscopic pursuits; and when papers refer to subjects that may at first sight seem a little beyond their reach, they will frequently find that the difficulty may be made to vanish with much less trouble than they suppose.

Without any prejudice in favor of particular pursuits or peculiar methods of instruction, we feel bound to give a preference to plans which bring truth home to the eye, and with this view it is impossible not to regard the microscope as one of the foremost instruments for the communication of knowledge, equally adapted to class teaching and to private study. No better investment can be made than in a good microscope, a binocular one being preferable.

A FACT FOR TEETOTALLERS.—Dean Stanley has just published a new book on Westminster Abbey. Like everything he does, it is delightfully written, with a finish of style which is in these days rare. In looking over it pages I came upon a fact which I had either forgotten or never known—probably the latter. I should imagine that the fact is little known, for it would have been ridden to death by this time if it had been within reach of teetotal intellects. The Dean has to speak of Harry the Fifth, whom he describes as up to his time the greatest of English kings. Then he goes on to say that this great king—the Prince Hal of fame, who had caroused with the Falstaffs of his age, and knew the worth of good wine—would, had he conquered France, have destroyed all its vines, that he might put an end to drunkenness.—Once a Week.

THE New York Times says that if it were not for a few earthquakes, railroad accidents, murders, boiler explosions and such like, we should be tempted to think that the millennium was at hand. Only think of an army contractor being sentenced to five years of penal servitude for attempting to swindle the English government in some matter relating to the Abyssinian expedition. Attempting mind you, not succeeding.

A SINGULAR will case has come before the Roannes courts. A. M. Pitro died last year, and left his property to his heirs on condition of their spending £1,500 sterling in erecting a bronze monument on his tomb representing Death, under pain of forfeiting, in which case it would go to the sick poor of the town. The heirs wish to evade this somewhat insane clause.

ENGLISH JUSTICE.—It has, I believe, been gravely asserted by a Russian author that whenever a Russian has his pocket picked in England he is always sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, whilst the thief is allowed to go free. However absurd this assertion may seem, there is, or at least there may be, some ground for it. It is related that some years ago, before the Criminal Justice Act came into operation, the captain of a Russian merchant vessel, whilst passing through Cheapside, had his pocket picked and his handkerchief stolen. The supposed thief, a lad, was arrested and taken before a magistrate. He was committed for trial, and the witnesses had to be bound over to appear that day fortnight and give evidence. The form of recognizance is to appear or to forfeit one hundred pounds sterling to the Queen. To this the Russian objected. His vessel was to sail next day for Odessa. Her crew was on board, and by the terms of his charter-party he must sail. The magistrate had no choice. He could not try, neither would he discharge the prisoner. The Russian must enter into the recognizance or go to prison. The latter alternative he preferred, for then the owners of the vessel would know he was not to blame; and thus to prison he was sent. On the other hand, the friends of the prisoner, alleging his innocence, went before a judge at chambers, and procured his liberation on bail. At the termination of the fourteen days the sittings at the Central Criminal Court were held. The Russian captain was brought up in custody. The accused, forfeiting his bail, did not appear whereupon, without explanation, the Russian was discharged after having suffered fourteen days' imprisonment. Surely a foreigner would be justified, if he judged our law by its anomalies, in doubting its wisdom and justice.—Once a Week.

METEOROLOGISTS have labored hard to verify the popular belief regarding the moon's influence on the weather; but their researches have generally led to negative results. Mr. Park Harrison, one of the latest and most persistent inquirers into the subject, has, however, just arrived at a more positive conclusion, one which is interesting as a matter of science, and curious because it is paradoxical. The collation of a large mass of observations has revealed the fact that, when the moon is at first and third quarter, the temperature at the earth's surface is respectively above and below a certain average, so that there is manifested a tendency in the moon to warm the earth at first quarter, and cool it at last quarter, slightly, it is true, but still perceptibly. Now, at first quarter the sun has been shining a short time, and at last quarter a long time on the face of the moon turned toward the earth. Hence—and here is the paradox—the cool moon warms the earth, while the warm moon cools it. A perfectly philosophical explanation can, however, be given of the anomaly. The fact is that the moon, by warming the upper regions of the atmosphere, lightens or evaporates the clouds floating therein; the earth's heat is thus permitted to radiate and pass away into space, and the lower strata of the atmosphere in consequence become cooled. This effect reaches its maximum at the time of the moon's third quarter, and falls to its minimum at that of the first quarter, and hence the comparatively high and low temperatures at these times.—Once a Week.

GLAZE THE CIRCUIT.

Our preachers must not let their people live in the dark. To introduce this ADVOCATE into a family is like putting a glazed sash in an old-fashioned log house. It lets in the light on bleak, cloudy days, and is a perpetual joy. There is more civilization in window glass than there was in all the hieroglyphics of Egypt. To deliberately suffer a Christian family to live on, in these stormy, stirring times, without knowledge of the battle now waging between truth and error, Christ and Belial, is to consign them to the centuries of the Pyramids. Where is that powerful preacher that can supply the place of a whole newspaper, by a monthly appointment, who proposes to be the light and window-sash of the whole settlement!

Whoever wants an appreciative, wide-awake audience, let him sow gladness by introducing into every farm-house on his work the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Glaze the whole circuit; don't let the world turn round without the families knowing it.

THE BALTIMORE COFFEE TRADE.—The Sun says that the total imports of coffee during the past year were 289,778 bags, of which 266,926 bags came direct from Rio de Janeiro, 1,220 bags from Lagnayra, 581 bags from other foreign ports, and 21,061 bags from coastwise ports. This is in the aggregate the largest import of coffee ever made into the port of Baltimore during any one year.

TRANSPLANTING.

In spiritual as in natural husbandry this is a critical operation. Many trees and plants die under it, many more are withered and stunted, and are sickly and unfruitful, whilst a few are improved and do better for the change. The same is true of the spiritual process. Members of our churches are moving from one section of the country to another. What effect have these changes upon their religious welfare?

Some are culpably negligent about taking their letters, and others who take them fail to hand them in, and to unite with the church where they have taken up their residence. This is a common and great evil, a sin not of small magnitude—this negligence and indifference about their relations and duties, which those who were members of the church exhibit in their new homes. We have known instances where the interregnum between taking a certificate and depositing it has been used for a little relaxation, such as theater-going, and other diversions and practices incompatible with the Christian profession and discipline.

Sometimes people defer uniting with the church on the ground that their sojourn is temporary, or from other flimsy reasons it is delayed, until the certificates of membership are worn out or lost, or become so old that they are ashamed to produce them.

The experiment of living out of the church, for ever so short a time, is dangerous. It is like taking a tree from the soil and expecting it will retain its life without being immediately reset. If life is preserved, it has sustained an injury that may never be wholly cured. How much harm negligent Christians sustain by the presumption of living for a time out of the church cannot be estimated. And the loss to them is greater from the fact that the restraints and helps of their old associations are broken off, and they are now amongst those who do not know them as the children of God. In their old homes they were known as members of the church; the watchful solicitude of pastors and brethren were thrown around them; but in their new domicils they are not recognized as of the household of faith, and cannot be until they exhibit their credentials and publicly connect themselves with the people of God.

It is here that many have fallen and have been lost to the church and to heaven. They have been torn away from long accustomed religious associations, and before new ones are formed the sap and life of their religion is gone. All the records of backsliding and apostacy attest the fearful danger of delay in renewing our fellowship with the church. However specious the reasons for it, and plausible at the same time, there is serious risk in it. It is a temptation of the devil, and the disposition to yield to it forebodes shipwreck and ruin. From long and careful observation we are convinced that many souls are lost from this single cause, and that multitudes of members are lost to the church by changes of residence and the failure to promptly renew their religious communion.

But where the letter is duly deposited, how often does it prove to be a nominal thing? We watch the result very much, as the gardener watches a tree that has been taken from some other soil. Will it live and will it flourish as it once did? It is not uncommon to see those who in their former homes were pillars of the church, the backbone of its enterprise, and active and zealous in every duty, become cold and useless in the church whither they have removed their membership. There are reasons for this, in the fact that they are strangers, and that time is needful for the growth of new ties, and even of Christian friendship and sympathy. Everything at first is strange, cheerless, sometimes repulsive. A religious home-sickness comes over the soul, and great spiritual discouragement.

These disadvantages would be much lessened if the pastors and most experienced members of our churches better knew the "heart of a stranger," and would exhibit peculiar interest in those who come from other and distant charges. In most of our churches there is a lamentable defect in this respect. Pains is not taken to make the newcomer feel at home, and to supply the society and sympathy which are so needful, and which his heart is yearning for. This consideration, which ordinary courtesy not less than Christian benevolence would seem to require, is often utterly wanting. Nobody takes the stranger by the hand, nobody visits his family, and it requires a wonderful amount of faith and self-assertion to maintain the old standard of spirituality under such untoward circumstances. Of most of our charges the confession is a true one, "we are verily guilty concerning our brother." Often do we leave choicest and most sensitive spirits to languish and struggle in unfriendly neglect, when a little genuine kindness and encouragement would have cheered and saved them.

The jeopardy of the process would be diminished by more love and faithfulness on the part of the pastors and people, but it would not be altogether removed. There is danger at best, and he who changes his membership must be on his guard. He must become rooted and grounded as soon and as thoroughly as possible. Watchfulness and diligence and prayer are needed more than ever. Temptations to neglect church duties will be strong, and in alliance with the shock which the disruption of old habits and associations has occasioned. Where we are not so long and well known there may be a tendency to relax in circumspection toward the world; and the social enjoyment which is not immediately found in the church may be sought in the world and its unlawful pleasures. The only safety is in a most hearty entrance upon the duties and service of God, and the diligent improvement, especially, of the social and devotional meetings of the church.

By this process of transplanting we have seen the most vigorous and fruitful dwindle, and lead a half withered and barren life. It is with prayerful solicitude that we notice the process and look after the result. Does the transplanted member take vigorous root and deep hold of the soil? Is there no sign of loss or blight? And how great the relief when at length the crisis passes, and there is a healing and knitting of all the fibres, and the member, enrolled as having "joined by letter," becomes as a "tree planted by the rivers of waters?" At a time when there is so much shifting and changing of both temporal and spiritual homes, the effect upon our religious interests and welfare should be carefully examined, and the dangers to which we are exposed should be exhibited and averted.

PERSONAL.

We have been recently favored with the presence and ministrations of distinguished brethren: Revs. Dr. Marshall, Dr. Watson, of Memphis; Thos. Abernethy, jr., P. M. Goodwyn, and A. E. Goodwyn. The Rev. Dr. J. Hamilton is now in the city, just returned from a trip to Key West and Cuba, in search of health.

LIEUTENANT WARREN, an officer of the Royal Engineers, has for some time past been engaged, at the expense of an English society, in making extensive explorations on the site of the Temple of Solomon, in Jerusalem, and has already made some startling discoveries. He has, it is stated, established by actual demonstration that the south wall of the sacred inclosure which contained the Temple is buried for more than half its depth beneath an accumulation of rubbish — probably the ruins of the successive buildings which once crowned it—and that if buried to its foundation the wall would present an unbroken face of solid masonry of nearly 1,000 feet in length, and for a large portion of that distance more than 150 feet in height.

STOPPING THE PAPER.

Editors often apologize to subscribers for stopping the paper, assuring them "that no affront is meant." So tender are they that they give notice, one, two, three—look out! "when you see the cross-mark on your paper," know that its end is nigh. This is doubtless well meant, but there is another side to be considered. It may annoy a few persons to have a paper stopped when the year is out, but it is a positive luxury to others. Suppose a man discovers soon that the weekly for which he has paid is not the thing he wished for, that the editor's taste does not suit his, nor his opinions, nor the type, nor anything about the sheet, yet here it comes, certain as fate, once a week, if not oftener, postage going on, dragging its slow length through an entire year! What a relief to know that there is an end even to a newspaper! Now imagine the state of mind in which that subscriber wakes up to the fact that it has not stopped! He writes, and the post master writes; but still it comes. He remembers the law that if the paper is not refused, the subscriber is held responsible for the subscription price, and he does refuse it; but it won't stop! Suppose it should run on this way all the year, and the year after, and so on, and in fact never stop! Stopping a paper is somewhat like trying to stop a Dutch alarm clock which has been set to go off one hour before day, on a cold winter's morning, the party having concluded not to get up; or the stopping of a bagpipe that is practicing on an upper floor, or a locust blast on a hot day, or five hundred frogs in the neighboring slash, or the hand-organ at the door of the "Living Skeleton." One subscriber, poor fellow, writes on the margin of a returned ADVOCATE, "Mr. Editor, please don't send this paper any more." Ah! thought we, what an agony does that simple sentence unfold; who can tell how long the poor fellow has been trying to get his message through! Evidently he is almost exhausted, but fortune has at last favored him, and relief is at hand; we can now afford him a purer satisfaction than he has ever received from us before.

To stop a paper when the year is out, the money out, and the work fairly done, is the greatest pleasure we have—next to that of renewing a cash subscription. We hope that all exhausted subscribers will not charge us, but the mails, with insensibility if their paper still keeps coming.

A CONSCIENTIOUS AGENT.

Now as long as there is type, printer's ink and paper, a hard-working agent shall have this paper, for no man so certainly pays for it. And we only wish that we could afford to send it out broadcast into every poor Methodist family; but alas! poverty is not confined to agents, and readers, and country places. A poor man on a hard pavement is the perfection of poverty. We commend the spirit of the following letter to all our friends, in "country sparse and city full."

MADISON, March 15, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I had been wondering for some time how I should get money to pay for the ADVOCATE, and wondering too whether you would stop it at the time if I did not pay up to the time. Well I did not get the money to spare from pressing wants. Time expired 20th January, but the ADVOCATE came on to the 15th February. Still no three dollars to pay for it, and then its visits ceased and left us all sad. The little ones said: "Pa, did you get the ADVOCATE to-day?" The answer was: "No, no ADVOCATE to-day."

At the post office again, and lo! the ADVOCATE. A smile. Glad to see you, old friend. Let's see! "H. Copeland, agent." Well, that is by appointment, by authority. And I wish that would help over the other great difficulty. I have been trying to be agent all the while, but with—I need not say how little success. I wish I could send you—well, I don't know how many subscribers and the money, but I cannot—I cannot. But I am not done trying, nevertheless; if there is a chance for one you shall have that.

CUTTING THE KNOT.

The impeachment of President Johnson by the Senate is a foregone conclusion, if we may judge from the summary temper so far shown in the trial. Gen. Butler, who is a magna pars of the occasion, did not see why "the court should not proceed at railroad speed." We suppose a certain amount of inconvenience and delay must be endured by the impeaching managers through the solemnities and judicial forms necessary to give an expression of deliberate and constitutional justice to the proceeding. But it is evident that there will be no weakness displayed by that forty-two majority in going straight through to the end. The House attends in mass during the trial to strengthen the purpose and secure the determined will of the Republican caucus. All those hindrances which spring from authorities, precedents, literal constructions, and the spirit and letter of constitutional law, which usually force the flow of justice into its own deep, rocky channel, will be suffered moderately, nothing beyond. Doctor Curry, editor of the New York Christian Advocate, speaking of the impeachment, says: "The time has come when this thing must be settled," and "if the knot cannot be untied it must be cut."

And this we conceive to be the solution of the whole matter. The Radical Republicans cannot "untie" the knot, and they are now about to cut it. Justice is still arrayed in ermine, and seated in the chair of the Senate chamber, and the scales are still displayed, but to secure due weight it is urged that a sword be added to the arguments of the prosecution. No one can doubt that Dr. Curry's suggestion will be fully adopted. And the President now stands not so much at the bar of the Senate as at the door outside of the War Department. It is not the genius of the managers of impeachment that he has to fear, nor the strength of the indictment, nor the awe inspiring Chief Justice, nor the consciences of the court, but the sword which has been wrested out of his hand, and is now turning every way before the eyes of the country.

President Johnson, standing on his defense, represents in his person the Constitution of Washington, Madison, Adams, and the principles of the revolution of '76. His condemnation and expulsion from office will mark the transition from a government by public opinion to one of sheer force. The sword of the Macedonian which divided the Gordian knot first discovered its edge at Chaeronela upon the liberties of Greece. And henceforth all questions of personal right will receive a solution equally simple and forcible as that which Alexander introduced at Gordium, and which from that time to the present has served the purpose of all men who have become impatient of the restraints and difficulties which justice and religion equally oppose to the ambitious and the violent. In the Northern journals, both religious and secular, this is the spirit of the greater number, "cut the knot."

Such a result could hardly have been imagined, that in two years the party which carried through the war would have consolidated all the powers of this Republic in a caucus; that before it, as in the vision of Daniel, the three departments should fall which have always been cited as the concurrent essential parts constituting the stronghold of our liberties. But so it is; the two houses of Congress only record and go through with the policy of the caucus; the Supreme Court only affirms its decision; and presently the Executive will only execute its will. Without check, without respect to popular will, to tradition, to usage or to Constitution, it will have but one law of procedure, that which the spokesman of the great organ of Northern Methodism has announced as worthy of Congress and the occasion—"That which cannot be untied must be cut."

ONE clergyman in Boston took five hundred dollars in marriage fees during two days.

UNIVERSITY OF LOUISIANA.

We take from the Times the following report of the commencement exercises of the University of Louisiana, Medical Department:

There was a large attendance on the morning of the 10th instant, more especially of ladies, at the Lyceum Hall, to witness the graduating exercises of the above named college, and the character of the entertainment fully sustained the expectation of the visitors.

The graduating class consisted of about forty students, whose general appearance indicated that they had not misimproved their time, and who, to judge from the visitors in attendance, must have awakened a warm interest in their success among a large number of friends. The faculty of the college occupied the stage, an excellent band enlivened the occasion with its music, and the exercises altogether were of a character to make the day long remembered (as it doubtless will be) by each of the new professors of the healing art.

The conferring of the degrees was performed by the Hon. Randall Hunt, with an explanation of the meaning of the honor, and with a dignity of manner that lent additional might to his words. The valedictory on the part of the faculty then followed, and was delivered by Prof. Stanford E. Chaille, M. D., who explained the aims and objects of the medical profession with a force of reasoning and an earnestness of manner which favorably impressed every listener with the extent of the speaker's information and his familiarity with his subject.

The valedictory address of W. H. Watkins, which was justly received with applause, closed the intellectual portion of the exercises. The following were the list of graduates in medicine:

Wm. H. Watkins, La.; Thos. K. McNeil, La.; Yves R. LeMonnier, La.; Wm. S. Kendall, La.; Albert J. Roberts, La.; Peter Fairly, Miss.; Robt. J. Magee, Miss.; Jno. L. Beavers, Miss.; Geo. C. McCallum, Miss.; Frank Malhiot, La.; Sam'l H. Dockery, La.; Smith W. Compton, Texas; Jno. T. Kennedy, Texas; Jas. C. Loggins, Texas; Amos Graves, Miss.; Jas. J. Hall, La.; A. Ducatel, La.; Elijah A. Cox, Miss.; Nathaniel W. Bonton, Tenn.; Jas. E. Lay, Texas; Elbert A. Banks, Ga.; Henry D. Downman, Ala.; Jno. K. McLeod, Miss.; Joseph R. Lutere, Ky.; Wm. E. Crook, Ala.; Oscar P. Aubert, Ala.; Wm. J. Lamkin, Miss.; Elias B. Thompson, Ala.; Robt. W. Thompson, Texas; Jno. W. Ross, Tenn.; Bernard H. Dinkgrave, La.; J. Bridges Johnson, La.; Elisb H. Wells, Texas; Robt. B. King, Ark.; Joshua O. Dennis, Ala.; Chas. H. Kelly, La.

Graduates in Pharmacy—Chas. U. Gaudet, La.; Jas. R. Hastings, La.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine was conferred upon Prof. J. W. Mallet.

WE WOULD call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the new patent pianos, by Messrs. Raven & Bacon, New York, whose improvement is thus referred to by the New York World. Musical opinions given by this journal are considered very valuable, as they are made by critics of eminent talent:

Messrs. Raven & Bacon, who for a generation past have made an excellent piano-forte, have greatly improved the volume and quality of tone in their instruments by the application of a new principle described as the "combination sounding-board.

To express in brief the nature of the improvement, the sounding-board is doubled in that portion of the case occupied by the plate, and only the lower one is affixed to the sides of the case, while the upper or ordinary sounding-board is supported upon the other.

Between the two boards there is a space of about six or eight inches, which forms a vibratory chamber resembling that of the violin. The top board being freed from contact with the case at one end, vibrates with scarcely any restraint, and the lower board also contributes its quota of sonority to the whole. As a matter of course, the vibrating surface being nearly or quite doubled, the tone of the instrument is effected to the same extent, and it not only becomes powerful, but pure. A more flute-like treble and middle register has perhaps never been heard. The improvement is substantial to all appearances, and will command attention mainly because, like the overstrung bass, it violates no law in the construction of the instrument, but is a legitimate development of a fundamental principle.

MR. STANTON.—Secretary Stanton's nerves are very susceptible. The alarm he betrayed at the supposed nitro-glycerine plot gave them a severe shocking, and some Washington wags, induced by the success of that hoax, have lately perpetrated another that far surpasses it in absurdity. The phantom evoked this time to disturb his slumbers in the War Department was the terrible Mosby. A detective, employed to bring the garrison early notice of any movement of its Presidential enemy, was induced to believe that Mosby, the famous rebel guerrilla, had organized a force in the country adjacent to the Potomac river to surprise and capture the War office. Thereupon the utmost alarm and consternation seized the Secretary; he ordered out immediately the additional guard of seventy-five men who remained under arms in the corridors for two nights, another batallion was sent to garrison Long Bridge, where they spent the same length of time in the cold listening for the ring of guerrilla boots. The rear of the building was strongly barricaded, and now the only entrance to the timid old lady is through the 12th and 44th regiments of Infantry, with the 5th Cavalry as pickets, and numerous ante-rooms filled with spies and police. We have not yet learned whether his food is tasted beforehand on suspicion of poison, or whether he sleeps in a sheet of mail, but all this will doubtless come in time. Evidently the terrors that haunted Richard's dreams were but faint to those that cluster around Stanton's couch in the War Department.—N. O. Times.

ANOTHER COLENSO DECISION.—It seems to be impossible to divest Bishop Colenso of his hold upon the see of Natal. A suit has long been in progress in the Colonial Court, brought against him as trustee of the property of the church in Natal, and at last a decision has been rendered in his favor. A correspondent of the Cape Argus says the judge holds that at the time of the issue of the bishop's letters patent the colony had not independent legislative powers. He does not, however, go so far as to say that in every respect the letters patent are valid to confer coercive jurisdiction, but adopts the decision of the Privy Council that the Church of England in the colony is a voluntary association, and obedience on the part of the defendant is by express or implied contract, so long as he claims to be a member of that association. The other judges concurred, making the opinion unanimous. This is certainly an extraordinary state of things. Here is a bishop who has renounced his faith, and there is no power to say of him "his bishopric let another take."

AMERICAN INVENTION IN ENGLAND.—About two years ago a new mode of making wells was invented in this country. It consisted simply in driving a tube into the ground until water was reached. This invention has been patented in England, and is now coming into use there. The British government has recognized the merit of the invention by ordering a large number of tubes for the military expedition now fitting out for the release of the English captives in Abyssinia.

OBITUARIES.

THE LATE E. B. VAUGHAN.

When a good man dies—when one who has been eminent in all the relations of life, who as a citizen has been patriotic, useful and upright, as a Christian zealous circumspect and benevolent, as a parent and husband attentive, provident and kind—has been summoned by the hand of death to slumber with his fathers, his obituary should be written and read, not so much to pay a tribute to departed worth—to cast, as it were, a wreath of flowers upon his venerable ashes—as to hold forth his life as an example to be followed by those who would journey worthily through the pilgrimage of this world.

Such a man was E. B. Vaughan, whose loss our community is now deeply mourning, and for such reason is this brief, far too brief, obituary tribute rendered to his memory.

Mr. Vaughan was a native of Virginia, where he was born in February, 1798, but at an early period of his manhood came to Alabama. He first settled in Madison county, then in Marengo, but afterward removed to Tuscaloosa, with whose interests he was identified for nearly the third of a century. As a citizen he felt a deep interest in and contributed largely to the prosperity of Tuscaloosa. In his death the community lost another of those few old and loved citizens (God bless them!) who link Tuscaloosa of to-day with the Tuscaloosa of the past.

As a Christian no man ever kept his garments more unspotted from the world. In early life he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was ever a "burning and a shining light." His place in the sanctuary was always filled, save when sickness confined him to his house. In the prayer meeting, the class meeting, the Sunday school, and all the other appliances of the church, he ever manifested a deep concern. Sunday after Sunday the worshipers in the Methodist Church will turn their eyes, dimmed with the tears of remembrance and regret, to the place in which this loved patriarch so long sat.

"Can that man be dead
Whose spiritual influence is upon his kind?
He lives in glory, and his sparkling dust
Has more of life than half its breathing moulds."

He was remarkable for his large-hearted benevolence—not that kind of charity which seeks to obtain the applause of man—but that simple, pure love to fellow-creatures upon which the choicest smiles of heaven love to light and linger. Industry, frugality and uprightness had brought abundance to his door, but he regarded himself as God's almoner, and forgot not the beautiful lessons of charity which the sacred Scriptures had instilled into his heart. Many a widow's sad heart was relieved, many an orphan's tear wiped away, or changed into a smile of gladness, by his quiet, unostentatious charity—that charity which scarcely permitted the left hand to know the doings of its fellow.—The fire upon many an humble hearthstone has burned more brightly from his presence.

His death was a fitting seal and close to such a life. For seventy years had he journeyed righteously through the world and when the voice of the "Master of Breath" said to him, "Come up higher," he cheerfully and gladly obeyed the summons. The bright rays from the many virtues that gemmed his long life converged to the focus, the grave, and lit up the footsteps of the departing Christian, through the "valley and shadow," into the perfect day of heaven.

His funeral ceremonies were sad and impressive. The Constitutional Union Club attended his remains, mourning their loved president and departed patriotism. The church was thronged with his fellow-citizens, whose moistened eyes and saddened hearts responded to the beautiful and solemn sermon preached by Rev. William Armstrong.

E. B. Vaughan is indeed dead, but his memory shall live and be revered, as long as goodness shall be respected in this community, by us and our descendants.

"That man lives greatly,
Whate'er his fate or fame, who greatly dies,
High-flushed with hope where heroes shall despair."

Dust of the valley, press lightly on the bosom of the dead patriot!

B. F. M.

Rev. ROBERT H. ARMISTEAD departed this life, at his home on Red river, in Desoto parish, on the 19th of February, 1868.

Bro. A. was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, on the 26th of August, 1807. Here he grew to manhood and married. Soon after he sought a home in the then far West, and settled in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, about the year 1828. There he resided many years. He moved to Desoto parish in 1854, where he resided until his death. Bro. Armistead joined the church and embraced religion at Sharon church, in Amite county, Mississippi, under the preaching of Rev. Mr. Angell, in 1843. His conversion was a sound and bright one, and his commission to preach the gospel may justly be dated from the same happy occasion, for straightway he commenced exhorting his kindred and friends to seek the Lord, and from that good day he has been laboring in his Master's vineyard. Brother Armistead had not the advantages of an early education, nor that of an early training in the "way of life." But the good Shepherd called him. He heard and obeyed, and, according to the ability given him, has been doing good service in the ministerial army ever since.

Bro. Armistead was ordained deacon on the 9th of December, 1849, by Bishop Capers, at Natchez, Mississippi, and was ordained elder on the 16th of December, 1855, by Bishop Kavanaugh. He never joined the Conference, preferring to do the work of a local preacher, and as such he preached every Sabbath in the month. He preached without money and without price, and proclaimed the glorious gospel of Christ in the highways and hedges; and, though dead, his works will follow him, and in his crown there will be many stars, arising from solitary places, the abodes of the humble poor. Though over three-score years, he appeared to enjoy robust health until his last illness. The writer was present at some of his last appointments, and he appeared as full of zeal as in the days of yore.

Bro. Armistead left a wife and three children, the latter of whom are all grown and married, an aged brother and many relatives.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Pleno Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

Landreth's Warranted Garden Seeds.

PRIVATE FAMILIES WHO AIM to raise vegetables of the best quality only need not to be reminded that "figs do not grow on thistles," nor that from good seed alone can good vegetables be obtained.

Seeds may, indeed, grow freely enough, but unless they prove good in every respect it were better they had not grown at all. The seeds offered by us being mainly the produce of Bloomsdale, raised under our own personal supervision, with the aid of years of practical experience, we are enabled to speak with entire confidence as to their quality, and of the reasonable probability of satisfactory results.

☞ We have but few "Novelties" to offer. Our experience, obtained at some cost, is that out of the multitude of that class of vegetables advertised for sale, in most cases the good are not new, and the new are not good. Substantial, staple, well-known sorts are in the main the most reliable.

Purchasers who do not reside within ready access of the city, nor near merchants or druggists who vend our seeds, can be supplied by mail, postpaid. Priced Catalogues, for family use, with the Rural Register for 1868 (abounding in useful hints,) will be mailed, without charge, to all who apply enclosing a three-cent stamp. A QUESTION and that includes

You, Reader!

LOOK AT THESE FIGURES!

2,800	in One Day
1,968	in One Day
2,191	in One Day
1,707	in One Day	that is,
2,050	in One Day
1,618	in One Day	21,312
2,017	in One Day
1,712	in One Day	in only 10 Days!
1,931	in One Day
2,676	in One Day
&c.,	&c.,	&c., &c.

EXPLANATION.

The above figures give the exact number of Subscribers received per day, for ten days past, by the publishers of the American Agriculturist, and the work has gone on in the same ratio for a long time. The circulation went up to 130,000 last year, and the subscriptions so far this year are very largely in excess of that or any previous year!

What Does it Mean?

Why, simply this, that the former readers, who have tried and proved the Agriculturist, are so convinced of its great value that they not only continue taking it for themselves, but induce their friends and neighbors to take it also.—Could there be any better evidence of its real value?

An Edition of 159,000

copies was required in 1867. At the rate of increase for a month past the subscription list of the American Agriculturist for 1868 will reach 200,000 to 250,000.

1,000,000 Copies,

at least, and probably 3,000,000 copies, would be wanted this year if everybody should take the Agriculturist who would be profited by it, perusal, ten times the small cost.

The Truth Is,

nowhere else can you get so much real value for so little money as you find in the American Agriculturist—so much for yourself—so much for your wife—so much for your children—whether you live in the city, or in a village, or in the country—whether you be farmer, or gardener, or mechanic, or merchant, or minister, or lawyer, or whatever be your pursuit.

Of Engravings,

the Agriculturist contains a large number (350 to 400 in each volume,) the most beautiful and instructive published in any journal in this or any other country. The cost of the engravings alone exceeds Ten Thousand Dollars each year. They are finely executed, beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive. The engravings are alone worth a great many times the subscription price of the paper.

Of Original Information,

For the HOUSEHOLD,
For the CHILDREN,
For the ORCHARD,
For the GARDEN,
For the FARM,
&c., &c.,

the Agriculturist is packed brim-full. It is not a cheaply-gathered, scissors-and-paste-make-up of a paper, but the publishers employ a large force of the most intelligent and practical first-class men to be found in the country. These all devote their time and energy to gathering from every possible source just such information as the people need. It is their ambition and pride to print no line that is unreliable, and to condense the greatest possible amount of useful information into the least possible space. That they succeed in doing this is fully proved by the immense number of persons that continue year after year to take and read the American Agriculturist. It has now entered upon its Twenty-seventh year, and enjoys a circulation probably exceeding the combined circulation of all other rural periodicals, not only in this country, but in the world!

Reader,

You are invited to TRY the American Agriculturist for 1868. You will find it to pay, and pay well. It costs but $1 50 for the whole year, or four copies for $5. Its immense circulation divides the cost of editing, engravings, type-setting, office expenses, etc., among so many that it can be supplied at this low rate. TRY IT!

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

From Chambers' Journal.

JACK-FROST.

Jack Frost is a workmanful artist indeed;
Builds castles with pinnacle on the smooth enclosed glass;
Leaves flowers wherever his bright foot does tread,
And spreads a white carpet all over the grass.

He climbs to the top of the tall forest tree,
And crowns it with gems when the green leaves are gone;
How lovers of beauty and wonder are we
If we prize not his work, so tastefully done.

He breathes on the wind-dimpled streamlet, and lo!
A bright shield of silver gleams on his soft breast!
Across the broad river his arms he doth throw,
And its fast-flowing waters are hushed into rest.

If accurate and strange are the pictures he draws,
With a pencil of beauty forever he goes,
Would seek in his works to find out any flaws,
Would try to improve the warm tint of the rose.

Upon mushroom he lets beauty shine,
His fingers so nimble, so skilful and free,
More over, and quickly with jewels they shine,
And look fair, as we dream elfin bowers to be.

I love him, although from a bow that's unseen
He lets loose his swift-winged arrows of sleet,
As I cross the wide heath—their sting, sharp and keen,
But renders my cot, when I reach it, more sweet.

He comes to my garden, where Robin sings sweet
On the fence that is covered with roses in spring,
And makes it a palace of crystal complete,
Where fairies might dance in a jewel-wove ring.

He icicles fringing the bucket all worn,
That stands on the brink of the old woodland well,
Look brighter than dew-drops upon a May morn,
That gleam in the roses that grow in the dell.

Then come, O Jack Frost, from thy bleak Northern home,
Thou beautiful jewel-robed wandering sprite;
Show thy skill on the windows of my little room,
And spread o'er the meadows thy carpet of white.

From the Little Chief.

JEANETTE'S SELF-DENIAL.

A story is found in the German of a little girl named Jeanette, who once went out to see a grand review. She found a capital place from which to see the soldiers pass, and was looking to see them march, when she noticed a poor old woman in the crowd, behind her, trying very hard to get where she could see the soldiers. Jeanette pitied her, and said to herself, "I should like to see the soldiers march, but it isn't kind in me to stay in this seat and let that old woman stay where she can't see anything. I ought to honor old age, and I will."

So Jeanette called the old woman, and placing her in the nice seat, fell back among the crowd. There she had to tip-toe, and peep, and dodge about, to catch a glimpse of the splendid scene, which she might have seen fully and easily if she had kept her place. Some of the people said she was a silly girl, and laughed at her. Was she sorry for giving it up? No! She was glad, because she knew she had given pleasure to a poor old woman. Thus Jeanette was rewarded in her heart for her kindness to old age.

A few minutes later a man covered with lace elbowed his way through the crowd, and said to her, "Little girl, will you come to her ladyship?"

Jeanette followed the man to a platform within the crowd. A lady met her and said, "My dear child, I saw you yield your seat to the old woman. You acted nobly. Now, sit down by me. You can see everything." Thus Jeanette was rewarded a second time for honoring age by denying herself. You are glad, are you not? You admire her conduct, don't you? and will you not strive to imitate her?

If you do not, I think you need to take a lesson, not only from Jeanette, but also from the pure and blessed Jesus. He so denied himself as to leave his heavenly throne and come to earth to die for sinners. Surely we ought for his sake to deny ourselves little pleasures, when by doing so we can add to the enjoyment of the poor, the sick, or the aged. If you will, your heart will grow glad under the smile of Jesus; and if no rich lady or gentleman reward you here, yet in the great fatherland above Jesus will say to you, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of one of these, ye did it unto me."

"Swear not at all." Lay aside all by-words which seem harmless in themselves. Such words not only savor of profanity, but they are always ungrammatical and inelegant. A true gentleman, or a true lady, or a Christian scholar, uses no by-words.

It is said the Island of Jeddo, in Japan, is rich in iron and coal deposits.

SCIENTIFIC.

ELECTROPLASTIC.

Under this title the art of depositing metals in molds is generally known on the continent of Europe, while in England it has been known by the name of electro-typing; but probably the best name (for it is electro-casting, in contradistinction to pyro-casting, or cast-by-heat, as in ordinary founderies. The first idea of this art was suggested to Mr. Daniel on the invention of the galvanic battery which bears his name. M. Jacobi took up the suggestion, and produced some small castings of seals and other small objects; the process being so simple, it was extensively practiced by amateurs as an amusement. These castings were all on pure copper, as other metals were found too expensive for the process; indeed, even yet, when the process has been introduced into the fine arts, copper still is the metal that is mainly used.

The only other metals that have been electro-cast are silver and gold, but these to a very limited extent. The process of electro-casting in silver is a very slow process as compared with that of copper, notwithstanding that the equivalent of silver is nearly twice that of copper, and the electro conductivity of silver is also greater. The difference in the rapidity of deposition in favor of copper is owing, no doubt, to the difference in electro-conductivity of the solutions in which they are dissolved, sulphuric acid and water, in which copper is usually dissolved, being a much better conductor of electricity than cyanide of potassium and water, in which silver is usually dissolved. This is very evident when the same solution is used for both metals; the deposition of copper then is not half that of silver with the same current of electricity. Gold can be electro-cast more rapidly than silver, cyanide of potassium dissolved in water being used as the solution, which might have been expected, as its equivalent is greater than that of silver. Hither to these three—copper, silver and gold—have been the only metals that have been successfully electro-cast. It has often been attempted to deposit some white alloy which might serve as a base for electro-silvering, but hitherto without success. Ordinary German silver has been deposited, but the process is so slow, and, moreover, a considerable heat has to be maintained, so that for more than a simple coating it has not been successfully used. A white alloy for the above purpose is still a desideratum. From experiments that have been made, there appears no doubt that this desideratum will be supplied before long, but it will not be of the precise composition of ordinary German silver, but tin will take the place of nickel. There seems to be no doubt that pure tin could be electro-cast if we could make those solutions which give a regnline deposit conduct electricity more freely. We have seen some experiments made in this direction also, wherein there is every probability of success. At present many articles are electro-cast in copper which are intended to be electro-silvered, such as jewel-cases, work-boxes, tea-caddies, ink-trays, etc.; in fact, all such articles as are highly enriched by sculptured ornamentation and electro-silvered, this process being much cheaper than pyro-cast German silver, as all such castings require the use of the chisel and graving tool, besides smoothing and polishing, which electro-castings do not. There is no metal that will pay for pyro-casting and finishing but silver or gold, and even these, if done in quantities, are much more cheaply done by the process of electro-casting.

In the process of electro-casting copper there is nothing to be desired. It is very simple, and easily managed; in fact, when once fairly started, it will almost work of itself, and is less expensive than any alloy can possibly be, but the drawback exists in the metal itself, in it being so readily oxydized. Not that there is any difficulty in silvering it—that is now easily enough done—but it is after the article is silvered that the defect of this metal appears. Unless the coating of silver is very thick it is soon cleaned off, or if by accident it should receive a blow on any salient part, the silver might be taken off, and the red copper would appear, which soon turns to green and black by contact with the atmosphere. But ordinary German silver is subject to a similar objection; even common plated spoons and forks of this metal soon become very unsightly, and not only so, but even poisonous, if great care be not taken; so that a white alloy containing but a small proportion of copper would be a great acquisition for all electro-plate goods, but more especially for electro-castings in the finer branches of the art.—Mechanics' Magazine.

It takes 6,480,000 pounds of cotton to supply the daily demands of the cotton mills of the world.

FARM AND GARDEN.

CLOVER AS MANURE.

It has been justly remarked that the red clover plant is the foundation of successful farming. The remark will apply to all portions of the country, except it be to the neighborhood of cities where land is worth several hundred dollars per acre, and where stable manure may be obtained in abundance for the growth of garden crops and other high-priced products. Agricultural chemists, as well as observing farmers, have given it as their opinion that the manure of animals fed on good clover hay is worth five times as much per load as manure from straw fed animals. Taking it as granted that the estimate is approximately correct, it is obvious that the turning under of a green crop which produces such rich manure must in itself add greatly to the fertility of the soil. If a ton of green clover is worth five times as much for fertilizing purposes as a ton of common yard manure, made by animals fed on straw or timothy hay, and with straw litter largely intermixed, then a good crop of clover might be rated in value about as follows: Two tons of stalks and leaves, estimated when converted to dry hay, would be equal to at least four tons of the green material; and half this amount in roots would be two tons more—the whole, six tons, multiplied by five to bring it to the standard of common manure, would show a heavy crop of clover to be worth thirty tons of ordinary yard manure. This estimate may not be strictly correct, and it cannot always be, as yard manure varies much in its value according to age, amount of straw or corn stalks used, and mode of heaping or preserving. But let the estimate be varied so as to meet the differing circumstances, and it will still be seen that clover possesses eminent advantages. The influence which the roots possess in loosening and rendering mellow the heavy soils in which they grow is one of great importance—assisting, as it does, the diffusion of the manure of the leaves and stems through the soil in the process of decay.

During a recent visit to the nurseries of Geneva, New York, we had occasion to observe the great efficiency with which clover manuring was managed in preparing ground for planting trees. The comparatively small quantity of manure furnished by the village rendered the mode of enriching by clover an absolute necessity, and the excellent, healthy and vigorous growth of the young trees proved its great value. The crop is plowed under when in full blossom; if done sooner, there is too much succulence and not enough substance; if later, the stems have become too hard and woody, and do not become so well pulverized in decay, nor diffused through the particles of the soil. Before plowing the crop is well harrowed, which not only lays the plants flat on the ground, but draws them in the same direction as the course of the plow, allowing the sod to carry its own crest of plants when inverted. A log chain attached to the forward part of the plow, and to the right handle, and hanging in a loose loop between these points, and dragging on the ground, assists in completely turning under the otherwise straggling plants. It is thought best not to turn them under with a very deep furrow; and rolling the furrows flat immediately afterward prevents the drying of the leaves and stems, and hastens decay and intermixture. As young trees require a good depth of soil, the sod is again inverted with a larger plow, or to a greater depth, after the lapse of several weeks.—Country Gentleman.

TOBACCO.

Whenever the tobacco is soft enough to admit of being handled without breaking, the work of stripping off the leaves and tying, in preparation for market, should be carried on with no loss of time. Early in the season a press of other work is very apt to cause the stripping to be postponed, and if the crop be a large one, the getting ready for market is too long delayed. Great care should be observed in the proper sorting and handling. On each plant there will be usually three or four sorts, which should be put each in its separate allotment. In taking down the crop for stripping do not allow the sticks to be thrown to the ground, but handed down with care. The bundles are to be neatly tied, and then, while held in one hand, pressed by the other against the breast of the stripper into the shape it is intended to have when taken out of the hogshead for inspection. It shows better when pressed into a fan-like shape. This is very quickly done by passing the hand over it; then the bundle is to be laid down with care, not thrown down. It is an easy matter to make it keep this shape throughout the preparation for market. The value of the crop is much enhanced by neatness in handling it, and attention to such little matters begets a habit of care very essential to the successful planter. On the close of a day's work all done during the day is to be laid in bulks of two rows, with the tail somewhat lapping, and with no weight upon it but a few tobacco sticks. The floor of the house is to be cleared up, the sticks put out of the way, and the tobacco stalks preserved under cover. It is a common practice, and a most wasteful one, to throw them out of the door, and expose them to the washing from the roof. From an estimate made with some care, we have found the stalks from twenty acres of tobacco worth for manure about as much as a ton of Peruvian guano.—American Farmer.

WORK FOR MARCH.

Give every attention to the making of hot beds for raising tomatoes, egg plants, early squash, cucumbers, melons, etc.

Asparagus.—Continue to make new beds, fork over lightly, and dress the old beds with salt at the rate of about one pound to the square yard.

Beans.—Toward the end of the month a small sowing should be made of the early six weeks or any other kind of the early string varieties.

Beets.—Sow upon a warm, sheltered border as early as the ground is in a favorable condition.

Cabbage.—Plant out from the autumn-sown beds and make sowings of the early and true drumhead varieties for late summer and autumn use.

Cauliflower.—Plant out the young plants upon a warm border or moderate hot-bed, and protect by mats, etc., during cold days and nights. Make plantation of those which have been kept in frames during the winter.

Carrots.—About the middle of the month sowing of the early horn, and toward the end the long orange and Attringham may be made.

Celery.—Sowings of the early white and red solid should now be made upon slight hot-beds.

Horse Radish.—Plantations of this most useful and neglected plant may now be made.

Lettuce.—Sow for succession the early kinds, and plant out those which have stood the winter, for use in April and May.

Onions.—The main crop should be sown as soon as the condition of the soil, etc., will admit—and as it is a crop of some importance, we offer a few words of advice. The ground having been plowed or trenched during the autumn or winter, is allowed to remain in that state until in a good condition to work, when it is leveled down and marked out into beds 3½ or 4 feet wide, with spaces 18 inches wide. Before the seed is sown the beds are raised somewhat above the ordinary level by the soil from the 18 inch spaces, and when the surface has become perfectly dry the seed is sown and the beds rolled or trodden down until they appear as hard as a gravel walk. A thin coating of soil is then strewn evenly over the whole, and the roller passed over the beds. The beds being narrow, enables the operator to weed, hoe and clean with facility and without injury to the plants. The advantages of the above method of raising onions are: the plants having a greater depth of soil than usual, they grow with greater sturdiness than those highly manured upon low ground, while the elevation of the beds enables the sun to penetrate a considerable depth into the earth, thereby slightly checking late growth, and of course inducing early maturity.

Peas.—Early in the month sow early kinds, and toward the end, champion of England, advancer, etc.

Parsnips should be sown as early as practicable.

Parsley.—Sow very early.

Potatoes.—Plant for the principal crop not later than the end of the month.

Spinach.—Sow to succeed that sown in the autumn.

Salsify.—Scorzenera and radish should be sown as early as circumstances permit.

At the time of stirring the soil between any of the crops, strew a little soot close to the stems of the plants, which will prevent slugs and insects harboring there and eating them off under the surface of the soil, which they are very apt to do in the early part of the season. Use the hoe and cultivator between the winter standing crops, and keep every part of the garden clean and free from litter.—American Farmer.

In Benton county, Indiana, there is a farm of 24,000 acres, owned by Messrs. Fowler & Earl. They design it to be used entirely in preparing cattle for market. When the whole tract has been brought into proper condition it is expected 8,000 cattle can be fed on it.

The Texas Gazette says they have made no crops in that region, but that game is plentiful at their very doors. Going back to the wilderness!

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Dolemus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members: Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove,

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to The Good Samaritan, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. Thot meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

All communications on business should be addressed to

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. A fair but not active business has been done in the wolesale trade in dry goods, etc., but in other departments there has been but little animation. The sales of our leading staple have been restricted by moderate receipts and supplies, and factors holding at a fraction above the limits of pending orders. Operations in sugar and molasses have been confined to the local trade, and although Western produce has shown rather more animation, still the movement in it has been of limited extent.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed at 21 to 22c. for Ordinary, 23 to 23½ for Good Ordinary, 24 for Low Middling, 24¼ for Middling, and 25 for Strict Middling, since which the demand has been limited, buyers refusing to go on at the ruling rates, and factors equally reluctant to give way. On Saturday the movement commenced with some disposition on the part of buyers to come forward at slight concessions from quoted rates, but, so far from meeting them freely, factors were, if anything, more stringent in their pretensions, and the business was consequently confined to a few parties, who took 2,300 bales at full prices. On Monday there was less inquiry, and buyers generally being compelled to stand aloof by the high prices asked, the sales were confined to 2,100 bales, more than half of which was taken by one party. On Tuesday there was but little change. A few factors were willing to sell at easier prices, and accepted figures ¼c. less than quotations, but most of them, on the strength of light receipts, adhered to their previous pretensions, and hence there was very little scope for buyers, unless they were willing to pay the prices asked, and the business was consequently restricted to 750 bales, part at the rates of the previous day and part at a reduction of ¼c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,150 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 9,358 bales, against 9,553 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 195 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 521,470 bales, against 619,062 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 319,783 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 165,489 bales to Great Britain, of 49,982 to France, and of 129,414 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	—	to —
Ordinary	21	to 22
Good Ordinary	23	to 23½
Low Middling	24	to —
Middling	24¼	to —
Strict Middling	25	to —

Sugar.—The supply is light, but the demand is only in a jobbing way, at 12 to 13c. per lb. for Common to Low Fair, 14¼ to 14¾ for fully Fair, 15 to 15¼ for Prime, 16¼ for Choice, 16½ for Yellow Clarified, 17 for White, and 13¼ to 14 for Seconds.

Molasses.—The receipts are light, but they sell very slowly at 60 to 85c. per gallon for plantation, and 75 to 85 for refinery reboiled. Golden Syrup commands 81 to $1 10 per gallon. Cuba molasses is quoted by the cargo at 56 to 57½c. per gallon.

Flour.—We note a fair demand, light supplies and a firm market since our last review, but at slightly easier prices for Double Extra and the grades below.—There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 5,000 barrels, at $10 to $10 12½ per barrel for Superfine, $10 50 for Single Extra, $10 62½ to $10 75 for Double Extra, $11 50 to $12 30 for Treble Extra, and $14 to $14 75 for Choice Extra. On Tuesday there was less demand, and prices ruled more in favor of buyers.

Butter.—Choice Western is in light supply and moderately fair request. Sales of Goshen are restricted by the high prices which holders, under instructions from shippers, are now asking. We quote Western at 30 to 40c. for medium grades, and 40 to 45c. for choice. Goshen, 50 to 60c. per lb.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No 3 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLIER, M. D.

ATLANTA, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Colier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1866, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable.

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Colier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Colier can cure any case of Cancer

BRAZILIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

NITHEROY, Brazil, Feb. 10, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I believe it is nearly six weeks since my last letter was written. At that time we were just beginning to have real summer weather, as it is usually in this part of the empire.

Since the 10th of December the thermometer has generally ranged, in the shade, from 75 to 95, not often outside of these figures either way; indeed not often up to 95 in the shade. But while in the sun one feels its power more sensibly than in Alabama or Mississippi, when the sun shines with unclouded brightness, the heat to one exposed to its rays is very oppressive, while in the shade it is quite pleasant. This marked difference is caused by the breezes which are so common and so refreshing, and our nights are rarely ever so warm as to interfere with the most pleasant rest. Indeed, we commonly need cover the latter part of the night.

At this season of the year hands laboring in the field need three hours at noon, as they frequently cannot work much on account of the heat. On the other hand, a large proportion of our days are cloudy, and when this is the case it is usually pleasant.

The seasons continue, thus far, with the same uniformity as regards rain. There has been but one period since I moved to my farm, in September last, in which we have been more than a week without rain enough for growing crops. From the 1st to about the 17th of January we had no rain, and it was very hot, and all kinds of vegetation suffered considerably—much more than it would in the cotton States in the same length of time.

I have several lots of growing corn, some of it nearly matured, and others of various ages, down to some just up, and it all looks well, and for a month past all kinds of vegetation has been growing with real tropical luxuriance. Of late we have thunder showers almost daily, and the hardest rains I have yet seen in Brazil, one or two of which made us think of the rains in our native land.

PEOPLE RETURNING TO THE STATES.

I think a large majority of those who come here from the South come without any idea of ever engaging in any kind of manual labor; yet four-fifths of them land here without money, or nearly so, and of course without work they are soon in want and destitution. Hence very many of these are anxious to get back to the States.

There is one other cause which is no doubt very potent with many of our best people who return to the States—I mean the tricky, cunning and unprincipled character of many of the Brazilians, especially about the city of Rio. I doubt if there is a city in America which has a larger per centage of this class. They are so utterly devoid of all principle that you can place no confidence in them. On the other hand, it is but just to say that in Rio there are honorable and noble-hearted men, who have never failed in their substantial kindness to all sober Americans, and I have never known of a case in which a sober man was refused assistance when he asked for it. Some have been aided who have foolishly wasted what was first lent, and on second application have been rejected. But industrious, sober business men can readily obtain assistance, and they can buy property on good terms, on credit, when they have a small per centage in cash.

In the interior the intelligent class are all, or nearly all, anxious for our people to settle among them, and they are very kind to those who do so, doing many things for them free of all charge. You will perhaps remember that I have before expressed the opinion that our people had better settle in the improved districts of country than to go into the wilderness. I am still fully satisfied of this.

WANT OF SUCCESS AMONG AMERICAN EMIGRANTS.

That our people at home may understand how a large proportion of the false and foolish stories about Brazil get into circulation by returned emigrants, I will state a few facts which have come within my own knowledge. Of all the young men, and the number was large, who came out on the Catharine Whiting, in July last, I know of but one, and I think he was the only one, who went promptly to work, and kept at it. That one was a boy of sixteen years of age. A very short time after landing he went to a gentleman in Rio, who had been a friend indeed to scores of our people coming here, and in two or three days this youth was engaged as a plow boy, at one dollar per day and board, with an American planter who is some thirty miles from the city. In a short time his employer arranged for him to work only four days in the week, without any diminution of pay, and recently he has taken him from the plow and placed him in charge of a part of the hands on the plantation, and with increased pay.

FENCING AND BUILDING MATERIALS.

Of the first I will just remark that one-fourth of the expense needed for fencing in the States will suffice here. Hedges are easily and rapidly made, and wherever the bamboo grows it is used, and is the cheapest rail timber in the world. You get the canes from thirty to eighty feet in length, and tie them to posts with the Sipo vine, or nail them on, and you have a fence for years.

Nearly all buildings in the empire that are intended to be comfortable are built on this wise: a frame roughly put up, answering to the size of the house intended, is the first thing. This is then covered with rough lattice work inside and out, leaving a hollow space in the middle, in proportion to the desired thickness of the walls. This space is then filled with dirt, stones, broken brick, etc., mingled with mortar, and the mortar made to completely cover the lattice work; and afterward this is nicely plastered and covered with tile. Houses thus built will stand for ages.

I have just recieved the appointments of the preachers of the Mobile Conference, through the kindness of Brother Spillman.

It was comforting to my heart to look once more upon the list of familiar names, with which my own has been identified for the last twelve years. A Methodist preacher never knows how much he loves his brethren until he becomes separated from them. Next to his wife and children they live in his brotherly recollections. May God bless with his richest gifts and blessings the brethren of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, and carry them and their sufferiug charges through the days of darkness and suffering that are upon them now.

Fraternally your's,
J. E. NEWMAN.

MR. JAMES A. RAYNOR, president of the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad, who has been here for a week, and has obtained all the legislation requisite for the construction of that work over the bayous, rigolets, government lands, etc., leaves in the morning, and will be in New Orleans a couple of weeks. He wants a little additional municipal legislation from Mobile, but speaks favorably of the prospects of his road. Every one asks here: "What in the world is the reason the Opelousas Railroad is not continued or completed to the Texas line?"—Washington Correspondence N. O. Times.

THE London Star reprints Grace Greenwood's admirable account of Mr. Dicken's readings in Philadelphia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Lord Radstock, a sort of Rev. Creamcheese, is preaching in Paris drawing-rooms to audiences of ladies in full dress.

During the past one hundred and fourteen years there have been thirty-five administrations in England. The longest was the first Pitt administration, which lasted seventeen years and eighty days. The shortest was the first of Lord John Russell's three terms, lasting only ten days. The average is about three years and a quarter. Lords Russell and Derby were each three times Premier, the Marquis of Rockingham, Mr. Pitt, the Duke of Portland, Lord Melbourne, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel and Lord Palmerston twice each, and fifteen others once each.

THE ALABAMA CONSTITUTION.

House.—After unimportant proceedings the Alabama bill was resumed and discussed at great length. A motion to table was defeated by 30 to 103. A motion to strike out the second section was carried—74 to 33. Stevens' amendment granting universal suffrage was defeated without a division. Spaulding's substitute was adopted—77 to 54. It declares the Montgomery constitution the fundamental law of the provisional government. The officers recently elected shall qualify and enter upon the discharge of their duties on the 1st of May. The governor may convene the legislature elect under said constitution. The legislature shall possess all powers conferred by the Montgomery constitution. The legislature may submit the Montgomery constitution to the qualified electors with or without amendments. When the majority of the electors qualified under the act of Congress of March 23d, 1867, have adopted a constitution and the legislature has ratified the fourteenth article, the said constitution may be presented to Congress for approval. The law to provide a more efficient government in the rebel States shall remain in force in Alabama, except as modified by this act, until Alabama is admitted to representation.

THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL RESUMED.

WASHINGTON, March 30, 1868.—Chase entered and opened court—the usual formalities followed—journals read. Chase said: The managers will now proceed in support of articles of impeachment.

Butler spoke until 4 o'clock—concluding to a comparatively thin house. The seats provided for members of the House were entirely vacant, and the galleries were by no means crowded.

Wilson commenced the evidence, which is entirely documentary, and he was interrupted in the middle of the President's reasons for suspending Stanton by a motion to adjourn, which was carried.

Adjourned.

House.—The New Jersey resolutions, withdrawing assent to the fourteenth article of the Constitution, was presented. Mr. Boutwell objected to their reception, as they were not respectful, in this, that they charged the House with usurpations.

The hour of half-past 2 having arrived, the House went into Committee on Impeachment.

After their return, on motion, the New Jersey resolutions were returned to the person who presented them, as disrespectful and scandalous—Halsey, Hill and Moore, of New Jersey, voting aye; Haight, no; Sitgrave absent.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—The final vote on the Alabama bill, after adoption of substitute by 77 to 54, was 102 to 29—a strict party vote, except Williams, of Pennsylvania.

The order relieving Gen. Hancock from command of the Fifth Military District, and his assignment to the command of the Department of the Atlantic, was promulgated today. Gen. Hancock is here, and will assume command to-morrow, headquarters Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Impeachment ticket holders are dissatisfied again to-day. After the reading of the journal it was universally expected that Chase would take some kind of a stand, but nothing of the kind happened. Butler read his speech; it was a dreary affair, lasting three hours. At its close Wilson commenced reading certified copies of Johnson's oaths, Stanton's commissions, and kindred matter. The proceedings to-day appear to have made no impression on the public. Curtis took notes of Butler's speech. Stevens is much disgusted at not being able to open the prosecution.

ADDITIONAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

Senate.—Nothing prior to court. Reading the journal was omitted and evidence was proceeded with until Stanberry objected. Chase sustained the managers. Drake objected when Chase maintained he had a right to make preliminary decisions, subject to appeal. Drake appealed, and the managers were sustained. Butler said he was glad the issue arose when the ruling was in their favor. The defense took no part in the contest.

A motion to retire prevailed, Chase voting aye to decide a tie, Doolittle and Saulsbury, of the Democrats, only voting nay. After three hours' absence they returned, when Chase announced that the decision was that he should decide questions of evidence and preliminary questions subject to appeal to the Senate. Adjourned.

House.—Nothing of importance done beyond passing Tax Conference report.

THE M'CARDLE CASE.—DETAILS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL, ETC.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Judge Black called the attention of the Supreme Court, to-day, to the non-action in the McCardle case. It will be up again to-morrow, and notwithstanding the well ascertained fact that six of the judges are for McCardle, the case will be postponed.

Judge Grier submitted the following paper:

"This case was fully argued in the beginning of this month. It is a case which involves not only the liberty and rights of the appellant in this case, but of millions of our fellow-citizens. The country had a right to expect that it would secure the immediate and solemn attention of this court. By the postponement of this case the court will subject themselves—whether justly or unjustly—to the imputation that we have waived the performance of the duty imposed upon us by the Constitution, and waited for legislative interposition to supercede our action and relieve us from responsibility. I can only say, 'Pudet hæc opprobia dici et non potuisse repelli.'" (We are ashamed such opprobrium should be cast upon the court, and that it cannot be refuted.)

The Supreme Court has postponed the argument in the McCardle case until next term.

Gen. Hancock issues an order to-day assuming command of the Division of the Atlantic, with headquarters in Washington.

The division embraces the Departments of the East, of Washington and of the Lakes.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Supreme Court—The McCardle argument was postponed on motion of Carpenter, who was not prepared.

The impeachment managers made a tremendous effort to-day, saying that should the point go against them they would feel compelled to retire and consult the House. When the decision was announced, Butler said the managers desired to retire for consultation to settle the evidence taken to-day.

The President's friends seem in excellent spirits. It has transpired that the President changed the form of appointment blanks to conform to the tenure of office act after that law passed.

Gen. Morehead characterizes the interview between Stanton and Thomas as somewhat jocular—no hostile manifestations.

Butler volunteered his services to repeat, for an inaudible witness, but the defence objected.

The vote in private session sustaining Chase was 31 to 19.

In the Supreme Court a motion was made to advance the case of Martin and McGill, but was denied. It was appealed from the Circuit Court of Florida. It is a murder case, and the court suggested a remedy in the shape of an application to this court for a habeas corpus and writ of certiorari against the District Court. Counsel took no action on the suggestion. This case is similar to the McCardle case.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The following are the proceedings had in private session to-day:

Chase stated that the question was upon Drake's appeal from the chair—that the chair had power to rule in questions of evidence.

Henderson moved to postpone the question for the modification of the rules. Conness called for the yeas and nays—suspension carried by 32 to 18. Henderson then moved to amend rule seven so as to read as follows:

The presiding officer upon the trial shall direct all forms of proceeding while the Senate is sitting to try an impeachment, and all forms during the trial not specially provided for, and may rule all questions of evidence and incidental questions, which rulings shall stand as the judgment of the Senate unless some member shall ask that a formal vote be taken, when it shall be submitted to the Senate for decision; or he may, on his own motion, in the first instance submit any such question to the vote. Adopted—31 to 19.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The Martin and McGill case, in which the Supreme Court suggested a remedy, involves death before the next term of the Supreme Court.

Court adjourned to Monday next, and after rendering opinions will adjourn to the first Monday in December.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Senate.—No legislative session. At 12 o'clock the impeachment trial began.

The Supreme Court adjourned until Monday, when this term will close.

The Senate galleries are not crowded.

Two circuses in the city compete successfully with the impeachment exhibition.

Sumner's motion that Chase had no right to give the casting vote, yesterday, was defeated by 21 to 29.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Butler takes the lead almost entirely with the managers. He is their emergency man. The practice is very sharp—precisely after the manner of police courts, except that the thrusts are more keen.

The Senate in executive session rejected John Hancock as Steadman's successor.

Gen. Hancock received his department officers to-day.

Chinese Minister Burlingame has arrived at San Francisco.

The President's counsel have summoned the following witnesses; John McGinnis, of New York; Lewis D. Campbell, of Ohio; Bart. Able, of St. Louis; Gen. James B. Steadman, Gen. Wm. T. Sherman, and Gen. Lovell Rousseau.

Efforts to Impeach Washington.

ISSUES BETWEEN GEORGE WASHINGTON AND CONGRESS.—IMPEACHMENT PREVENTED BY THE PEOPLE.

The trial of President Johnson recalls the attempts made in 1795 to destroy the character of President Washington, with an intention, had it succeeded, to impeach him. The parties combined to accomplish these objects consisted of:

First. The opponents of the funding scheme of Alexander Hamilton.

Second. The partisans of the French Directory.

Third. The opponents of the excise law.

This combination assailed Washington with a bitterness and vigor never since surpassed in this country. The vials of party wrath were poured out against him through a malignant press. We are told by Chief Justice Marshall: His military and political character was attacked with equal violence, and it was averred that he was totally destitute of merit either as a soldier or statesman. The calumnies with which he was assailed were not confined to his public conduct; even his qualities as a man were the subjects of derision. That he had violated the Constitution in negotiating a treaty without the previous consent of the Senate, and embracing within that treaty subjects belonging exclusively to the legislature, was openly maintained, for which an impeachment was publicly suggested; and, that he had drawn from the treasury, for his private use, more than the salary annexed to his office, was asserted without a blush. This last allegation was said to be supported by extracts from the treasury accounts, which had been laid before the legislature, and was maintained with the most persevering effrontery.

In addition to the insurrection in the western counties of Pennsylvania, which Washington believed to have been "fomented by the self-created societies who were laboring to effect some revolution in the government," the President was embarrassed by divisions and dissensions in his cabinet, and a want of fidelity on the part of some members of the cabinet, and was also confronted by a serious dispute with the House of Representatives, arising out of his refusal to comply with a resolution of the House requesting the President to lay before it the instructions, correspondence and other documents relative to the treaty with Great Britain, negotiated by Mr. Jay. His biographer, Washington Irving, says:

"Washington, believing that these papers could not be constitutionally demanded, resolved, from the first moment, and from the fullest conviction of his mind, to resist the principle which was evidently intended to be established by the call of the House; he only deliberated on the manner in which this could be done with the least bad consequences."

Washington, in his answer, after observing that to admit the demand would establish a dangerous precedent, concluded by declaring that "as it was essential to the due administration of the government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be observed, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of his office forbid a compliance with the request."

This decided answer subjected President Washington to numerous misrepresentations and fabrications, which, says Marshall, "were with unwearied industry pressed upon the public in order to withdraw the confidence of the nation from its chief." Among all these difficulties President Washington pursued the even tenor of his way, but that his magnanimous heart received a deep wound from these persecutions and misrepresentations there is ample evidence in his letters.

To Jefferson he writes: "Until the last year or two I had no conception that parties would or ever could go to the length I have been witness to; nor did I believe, until lately, that it was within the bounds of probability, hardly within those of possibility, that while I was using my utmost exertions to establish a national character of our own, and wished, by steering a steady course, to preserve this country from the throes of a desolating war, I should be accused of being the enemy of one nation, and subject to the influence of another; and, to prove it, that every act of my administration would be tortured, and the grossest and most insidious misrepresentation of them be made, by giving one side of a subject, and that, too, in such exaggerated and indecent terms as could scarcely be applied to a Nero, a notorious defaulter, or even to a common pickpocket."

Again, we are informed that when the minister of the French republic set the acts of the United States government at defiance and threatened the executive with an appeal to the people, and the latter, notwithstanding the indignity thus offered to their chief magistrate, sided with their aggressors, and exulted in open defiance of his national policy, he became weary and impatient, and being handed one of those scandalous libels in circulation called "The Funeral of George Washington," wherein the President was represented as placed upon a guillotine, a horrible parody on the late decapitation of the French King, "burst forth," writes Jefferson, "into one of those transports of passion beyond his control; inveighed against the personal abuse which had been bestowed upon him, and defied any man on earth to produce a single act of his since he had been in this government which had not been done in the purest of motives. He had never repented but once having slipped the moment of having resigned his office, and that was every moment since. In the agony of his heart he declared that he had rather be in his grave than in his present situation; that he had rather be on his farm than to be made emperor of the world; 'and yet,' said he, indignantly, 'they are charging me with wanting to be a king.' From Randolph, Secretary of State, he demanded an explanation of his statements to the French minister (contained in an intercepted dispatch of the latter to his government) which reflected on the purity of conduct as well as fidelity of the secretary to his superior. The explanation was promised, and Mr. Randolph resigned on the spot."

The country finally took the alarm, and came to the defense of the President. The General Assembly of Maryland passed a unanimous vote to the following effect: That "observing with deep concern a series of efforts, by indirect insinuation or open invective, to detach from the first magistrate of the Union the well-earned confidence of his fellow-citizens, they think it their duty to declare their unabated reliance on the integrity, judgment and patriotism of the President of the United States."

Meetings were held in every part of the Union to express the public feeling in the matters referred to in this communication. The result was that the character of the illustrious Washington came out of the ordeal without a stain upon it, and the people, although they did not all espouse his views, avowed their readiness to support him in the exercise of his constitutional functions.—*N. A YEAR IN HEAVEN.

A year uncalendered—for what
Hast thou to do with mortal time?
Its dole of moments entereth not
That circle, mystic and sublime,
Whose unreached centre is the throne
Of Him before whose awful brow
Meeting eternities are known
As but an everlasting now!
The thought removes thee far away—
Too far beyond my love and tears;
Ah! let me hold thee as I may,
And count thy time by earthly years.

A year of blessedness—wherein
Not one dim cloud hath crossed thy soul;
No sigh of grief, no touch of sin,
No frail mortality's control;
Nor once hath disappointment stung,
Nor care, world-weary, made thee pine;
But rapture, such as human tongue
Hath found no language for, is thine.
Made perfect at thy passing; who
Can sum thy added glory now?
As on and onward, upward, through
The angel ranks that lowly bow,
Ascending still from height to height,
Unfaltering, where rapt seraphs trod,
Nor pausing, 'mid those circles bright,
Thou tendest inward unto God!

A year of progress in the lore
That's only learned in heaven! Thy mind,
Unclogged of clay and free to soar,
Hath left the realms of doubt behind,
And wondrous things, which finite thought
No brain essayed to solve, appear
To thy untasked inquiries, fraught
With explanation strangely clear.
Thy reason owns no forced control,
As held it here in needful thrall;
God's mysteries court thy questioning soul,
And thou may'st search and know them all.

A year of love—thy yearning heart
Was always tender, even to tears,
With sympathies, whose sacred art
Made holy all thy cherished years!
But love, whose speechless ecstacy
Had overborne the finite, now
Throbs through thy being pure and free,
And burns upon thy radiant brow.
For thou those hands' dear clasp hast felt,
Where still the nail-prints are displayed;
And thou before that face hast knelt
Which wears the scars the thorns have made!

A year without thee!—I have thought
My orphaned heart would break and die
Ere time had meek quiescence brought,
Or soothed the tears it could not dry.
And yet I live to faint and quail
Before the human grief I bear:
To miss thee so! then drown the wail,
That trembles on my lips, in prayer.
Thou praising, while I weakly pine!
Thou glorying, while I vainly thrill!
And thus, betwixt thy heart and mine,
The distance ever widening still.

A year of tears to me!—to thee
The end of thy probation's strife,
The archway to eternity,
The portal of immortal life.
To me the pall, the bier, the sod—
To thee the palm of victory given.
Enough, my heart—thank God! thank God!
That thou hast been A year in Heaven!

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

THE GREAT REVIVAL IN SELMA.

SELMA, Ala., March 23, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The wonderful and glorious religious movement now stirring this community, it seems to me, ought to be known and published abroad for the encouragement of Christians everywhere, proving, as it does, the fact that God has not deserted the land we love.

It commenced in a conference of prayer held by the ministers of the three principal churches—the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist. It was then and there resolved by these clergymen to unite in a series of meetings in the Methodist church. The meeting proved a success immediately.—The church was crowded nightly to overflowing, and sinners became convicted. The number of anxious inquirers for the way of eternal life gradually increased, until they were numbered by the hundred.

The members of these three churches were aroused to work for Christ. A morning prayer meeting was established, which soon became remarkable for the large attendance, and the presence of those who are seldom found in such a gathering. A young men's prayer meeting was appointed for half-past 5 P. M., which also achieved great success. Young and old left their places of business and repaired to the prayer meeting. The ladies also have appointed a prayer meeting.—These are not cold and formal meetings, but assemblies for earnest prayer that God would convert souls and save the people. This is not all. Little bands of praying men, now meet through the day in different parts of the city, in upper rooms, each praying for some special individual. This city has never before been made such a scene of prayer. Men stop each other on the streets, visit each other in places of business, to converse on the great subject of immediate personal salvation. This work is going on night and day. The oldest residents here declare they never have seen anything like this religious movement. In consequence the revival has broken out with powerful effect.—The whole community is stirred. Hardly an individual can be found who is not thinking seriously on the great subject of salvation.

Sinners, so hardened that no hope hitherto has been entertained that they would ever come to Christ, have been reclaimed and brought to know the Saviour in the pardon of their sins. In two weeks seventy-four have been added to the churches, besides a large number who are just delaying to take this step until they become better satisfied with their condition of acceptance with God.—There is no abatement in the movement. Every one feels that God is working, that the power of the Holy Spirit is displayed in our midst. What is remarkable about this great work is the fact that there is no undue excitement about it, no scenes of wild commotion about the altar; but it moves on calmly, quietly, while the work is deep, thorough and wide-spread.

Men are in earnest. The churches are aroused. The ministers preach with the power of the spirit. We cannot tell when the meeting will stop, for there seems to be no end as yet. Men are ceasing to grumble and mourn over the dullness of the times and the deplorable state of the country. These things are forgotten in the absorbing theme of salvation through Christ.

Your's, &c.,

A. D. McVOY.

BRIDGEVILLE, Ala., March 9, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have been holding church meetings on my work, and find that they afford a fine opportunity for presenting the claims of our church papers, and especially our Conference paper. Some say they will give me their subscription as soon as they can procure the change.

We were blessed with gracious revivals at most of the appointments on this circuit last year, and I would remark that they were revivals that have left their impress upon the people—that waked up a spirit of prayer. Prayer meetings were established in communities that had hitherto been without these strengthening means of grace, family altars erected that had not been erected before, and some that had been pulled down rebuilt, with the resolve that they should not be broken down again. One hundred and forty-three white and thirty-nine black members were added to the church on this circuit, and yet we look upon the world around us and see scores who are out of the church, out of Christ, and in the broad way to ruin. While we enjoyed such showers of refreshing from the divine presence, at most of the churches on the Bridgeville circuit last year, two or three churches seemed not to catch the fire. And oh! how they need a gracious revival, a fire of love, that onlivens the soul and springs to action its spiritual powers. Oh! that we may have this year greater displays of divine power and influence, until this whole circuit and all this country may move and act under the guidance of the Holy Ghost.

Pray for us, and may the pleasure of the Lord prosper in our hand.

R. D. CARVER.

THE English Wesleyan Conference is about to publish, by subscription, the entire poetical works of Charles Wesley, never hitherto collected. The whole of the poems (with a few by John Wesley) will be included in about 12 volumes, crown octavo. Subscription price, two guineas for the 12 volumes. Six volumes are promised the present year.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

Rev. Dr. McFerrin, in a letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

Accompanied by Brothers Cunnyhani and Boring, we reached Baltimore on Monday evening at 10 o'clock. On Tuesday the Board of Foreign Missions met. On Wednesday morning the Baltimore Conference commenced its session in the Central Church, Bishop Doggett presiding. Bishop Early and Bishop Wightman were also present, and visiting brethren from several sister conferences. The session of the Conference was very pleasant and profitable. Large crowds attended the daily proceedings, and deep interest was manifested by all present.

The missionary meeting on Saturday night was a success; nearly one thousand dollars was contributed, after addresses by Bishop Wightman, Dr. Grecu, and Brother Cunnyngham, of Abingdon, Virginia. More than one thousand dollars was given at the Central Church in aid of superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, and about $1,200 at the Sunday-school celebration at Trinity Church, on Tuesday night, in aid of the cause of Sunday schools.

The past was a glorious year in the bounds of the Baltimore Conference. Our church improved twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, five hundred per cent., in various localities, and still the work goes on. But I must close by handing you herewith the proceedings of the Board of Foreign Missions, which you will please insert, and oblige

J. B. McFERRIN.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In the kind providence of our Heavenly Father we are again brought together as a board. The past has been a year of great trial and suffering throughout the South. From this cause the collections in all the benevolent institutions of the church have been affected. Yet from all the circumstances around us, and the great want of money in the country, the liberality and willingness of the church to respond to the call have been gratifying to witness.

Your secretary, as far as he was able, visited the sessions of the Annual Conferences—having attended the St. Louis, Louisville, Holston, Tennessee, and North Carolina Conferences—and was prevented, while on the way, by affliction, from meeting with the Virginia and South Carolina Conferences.

Before all the Conferences, either by himself or his fellow-secretary—Rev. Dr. McFerrin—in person and by special appeals in circulars, the attention of each was called directly to the importance and necessity of a prompt, united and vigorous support of the cause of missions, both foreign and domestic.

The secretary, with the committee (Drs. Green and McFerrin) appointed to settle with the heirs of the Rev. Thomas Johnson, met in Kansas City, Mo., in September last, and performed the duty assigned them. A full and satisfactory settlement was had with the heirs, by which the amount of $8,000 was secured to the Missionary Board.

At the same time and place, from T. S. Huffaker we received a note for $250 for our interest in the property of the Shawnee Mission at Council Grove, Kansas. These several obligations are now in the hands of your treasurer. In connection with this subject, we would further state, we have also filed with your treasurer a deed from Darius Gregg, of the State of Texas, for 640 acres of land, lying in Harris county, Texas.

We would also report a note, well secured, now amounting to $3,600, now due this board, and placed in the hands of a worthy member of our church in Louisville, Kentucky, for collection.

From the Indian Mission Conference we continue to receive most encouraging reports of the successful labors of our faithful missionaries engaged in that field of labor. A great work was accomplished in that Conference in years past. Previous to the war we numbered 30 appointments, a membership of 4,000, with 6 manual labor schools, and 640 pupils.

In no section of our country were more desolating effects of the war felt and witnessed than in this Conference. Our schools were abandoned, and all our missions broken up. Since the war our membership are returning to their homes, and our Conference is again regularly organized.

Bishop Marvin has, with great zeal and devotion to the cause, in his Annual Conferences, consecutively done much to re-establish this glorious work; while, at the same time, his efforts are being fully sustained by the faithful superintendent of the missions, the Rev. John Harrall.

We already number thirteen appointments, with a devoted ministry and a constantly increasing membership. Every consideration of humanity, patriotism and Christianity should prompt the church to a vigorous and liberal support of our Indian Missions. The board, at the request of Bishop Marvin, appropriated $5,000 the present year for the support of these missions; the bishop nobly offering to raise the funds.

He has thus far, amid his many other arduous duties and labors, given, as far as he could, his time and attention to this work. He is meeting with great and merited success. The Missouri Conference gave, at her missionary anniversary meeting, $300, and the St. Louis Conference $400, for this noble purpose. Everywhere the church should aid in this effort. Unless we now sustain our faithful missionaries in that field of labor, all that has been accomplished in the past will be lost.

From our distant mission in China we continue to receive the most favorable reports. Since the last annual meeting of the board the Rev. M. L. Wood, one of our missionaries, has returned to the United States. He has labored for the great part of the time since his return in traveling and lecturing, to aid in support of the mission. He has now, however, for the present, an appointment in the North Carolina Conference. Our brethren, the Rev. Messrs. Allen and Lambuth, are, with untiring efforts, in every way possible, devoting themselves to accomplish the great work assigned them. In the absence of the funds so much needed for the support of the mission they have, by their own personal efforts, gone far toward the support of the mission. It is greatly to be desired that the liberality of the church at home will soon obviate the necessity of this additional labor, thus self-imposed and voluntarily assumed by these dear brethren.

The board has recently forwarded to the mission $1,500, and hope soon to be able to add to the remittance made. We would earnestly recommend to the prayers and efforts of the whole church this mission. Let it not languish and die! If the inability exists to add to the number already there, let us, at least, with united effort, rally to the full support of our brethren now in the field.

We publish, in this connection, the following-named property owned and now held by our church in China:

1. Large double house; accommodates two families comfortably.
2. Comfortable dwelling-house.
3. Very inferior dwelling, (now,) with a number of Chinese houses on the lot. And attached to this dwelling is a school-house, built by Rev. J. W. Lambuth, (with money furnished by the Mississippi Conference,) and formerly used by Mrs. Lambuth.
4. Lot of vacant ground, quite large enough for a building lot.
5. A lot, on which is built a number of Chinese houses, (say about thirty in number.)
6. One chapel, not large, in the city of Shanghai.
7. One small chapel on the lot of the double dwelling house.
8. One small lot and chapel, with a dwelling on second story, in the town of Nai-Ziang, sixteen miles west of Shanghai. The building, Chinese.
9. One improved lot, with old Chinese house, in the city of Kading, thirty-two miles west of Shanghai.

The value of the above named property, at a low estimate, is valued at sixteen thousand (Mexican) dollars. It is to be hoped that the coming year may witness a much larger amount raised for Foreign Missions than in the year past. A proper appreciation of the importance of the enterprise upon the part of the church, with a more entire consecration to God and his cause, would soon supply your treasury with ample means. We have been, and are still in debt. Gloomily and fearfully this debt has pressed upon us, paralyzing, to a great extent, the efforts of the church, and disabling the board from giving favorable responses, as they desire, to the many calls which are constantly made upon us, for the word of God and the living minister.

As far as your secretary is able, he would state the amount of our indebtedness. First. What is usually styled the China debt, and is in the hands of one party, now amounting to near $24,000. Second. Debt for Indian Missions, in the hands of one party, $21,000. A portion of the last named amount, there is but little doubt, can be satisfactorily arranged by the Chickasaws and Choctaws assuming its payment.

There are other debts in the form of drafts, in the Indian and other Annual Conferences, in the hands of the preachers and others, the amount of which it is impossible for us exactly to state. These drafts are being paid in part at the sessions of the different Conferences, and the preachers in many instances generously donated part of their claims. These credits are being entered accordingly on the drafts. They will, either in whole or part, from time to time, be presented to your treasurer. As near as we can judge, the whole amount of these drafts does not surpass some $14,000.

To support our present missions and pay the debts named, in these dark and trying times, seems indeed to be a work of great labor. Yet the cloud is being lifted; the future is one of hope. There is now safely secured and due your board $11,850. The drafts are constantly being lessened in amount, as we have already named. A prompt and united effort upon the part of the whole church, even in our present entangled condition, would soon place in your treasury the amount required.

If, to this end, we could but secure the co-operation of all the Sabbath schools—forming them into Juvenile Missionary Societies—the gratifying result would soon be announced that our treasury was full; we thus would educate the coming generation, and systematize them in their efforts to aid in the salvation of the world.

E. WADDELL,
Secretary Board Foreign Missions.

Great Thibet and the Grand Llama.

Great Thibet is a portion of Central Asia, about which there has been a veil of mystery. Huc and Gabet, and some Russian explorers, we believe, have penetrated the country, and the world has read their hasty and fragmentary reports with much interest. The London Times, of March 3d, contains a long letter from Calcutta, under date of January 23d, announcing that a new and more complete, and above all, a scientific examination of this comparatively unknown region has been made by a Pundit, a native Indian of semi-Thibetan origin. This Pundit was as good as a Yankee for stratagem and insuperable audacity, without which he never could have got back alive. He was put up to the work by certain officers of the British government in India, and well supplied with funds, for the purpose of effectually deceiving the inhabitants on their weak side. He pretended to be a devout Buddhist, and carried a "mani-chuska" or prayer wheel, which contained a compass and his field notes. In the wooden bowl, worn at the waist by all persons of his supposed class, was secreted some quicksilver, for latitude observations. A sextant, thermometer and chronometer, and a bull's eye lantern for night work, were disposed of elsewhere about his person. Thus equipped the Pundit worked his way through to Lhasa (or Lassa,) the sacred city of Great Thibet, the metropolis of the Boodhic religion.

The distance from Nepaul, by the route taken, was not over 800 miles; but so many were the difficulties encountered that the journey consumed over seven months. The Pundit's funds at last gave out, and he had to support himself by teaching Hindoo book-keeping to traders on the road. In his passage over the lofty Khasola mountains he saw the great Yamdocho Lake, of which conflicting accounts have been given by various explorers. It is 13,500 feet above the sea, 45 miles round, fresh, very clean and full of fish. In the middle is an island 2,000 to 3,000 feet high—a curious topographical feature.

Lhasa, the holy city, is about 11,400 feet above the sea, is 1½ miles in circumference, has a population of 9,000 women and 6,000 men, besides 1,500 Bhootea (or native) soldiers, 500 Chinese soldiers, and numerous (or innumerable) monks. The temple is a large edifice, in the centre of the place, containing idols heavily inlaid with gold and gems. Around the temple cluster the bazaars of the Cashmeree, Napalese, Chinese and other merchants from abroad, permitted to trade there. Wealthy monasteries, one of which shelters the enormous number of 7,700 priests, dot the hills in the neighborhood. The Grand Llama (Lama, the Pundit spells it)—more formally known as the Gewaring-loo-che—lives in a fort a mile away. The intrepid traveler called on this exalted personage, and took tea with him. The present occupant of the office is the "thirteenth transmigration," and a handsome boy, thirteen years old. He sat on a throne six feet high, with groups of priests in an attitude of admiration around him, and two behind him bearing bundles of peacock feathers. To the right of the Grand Llama, on a throne half as high, sat the Gvalpo Rajah, the real ruler, under the Chinese resident called "Amban," but nominally the Prime Minister. The Llama did not give his tea for nothing, but received in exchange silks, sweets and money. The Pundit, and the devotees with him, were then invited to inspect the temples, and the rich images and hangings, after which they were dismissed. Many interesting facts, but a few of which have been furnished for publication, were gathered about the religion and government of Great Thibet. These, for the most part, corroborated the statements of previous explorers. The bodies of dead Llamas are carefully kept in coffins, and the people believe that they diminish in size while the hair and nails grow. On the death of a Llama a child is selected who is supposed, from certain indications, to have received the spirit of the deceased. A number of articles are placed before him, among them some that were worn on the person of the dead Llama. If the child selects those objects he is at once placed upon the throne and becomes the spiritual sovereign.

A cabinet, or "Kaskak," of four ministers, under the general direction of the Gyalpo, conduct the government—and a very bad government it is. The people are taxed even worse than in England or the United States. Not only justice, but the privilege of being judged, is regularly bought and sold. A judgeship being vacant, goes to that monk who will pay the highest price for it. He is arbitrary and exacting at all times, but is worst during the first twenty-three days of the year. Then all the priests assemble to do him homage, and they proceed to fleece the people. The working classes seem to suffer the most, and fly from the city. Although a river is close at hand, the people are compelled to take water from the wells, and for that are taxed three pence a month. Polyandry—which is the opposite of polygamy—is one of the singular institutions of the country. The principal articles of traffic are tea, from China; musk, from a region called Kahm, between Lhasa and China; and gold and silver ornaments, chiefly from India. Meats, grains and vegetables are abundant and cheap. The people are intelligent, and but for their oppressive civil and religious government, not badly off.

The Pundit played his game so well that he remained at Lhasa three months, unsuspected by the government, and then returned home by another route, arriving in British India after an absence of eighteen months. Among the scientific results of his journey are meridian latitudes of sun and stars, taken from latitudes at thirty one different points. He also made elaborate route surveys of 1,200 miles. One of the roads that he traversed is perhaps the most remarkable in the world. It is the great Thibetan road, 800 miles long, which scales the highest mountains of the country. For a part of the distance it is from 15,000 to 17,000 feet above the sea, and is so well made that a horseman need never dismount except to cross rivers. Along this national highway are 22 stopping places, at intervals of from 20 to 70 miles, with houses capable of accommodating 150 to 200 men, and ample provisions for relays of horses and food. The government couriers go the whole distance without stopping, save to change horses and to eat. The journey is made by them in about twenty days. The packages which they carry—letters, money or other valuables—are placed in the bosom of the rider; his clothes are sealed over them, and only the person to whom the articles are sent is allowed to break the seal. Great Thibet understands the express business, if nothing else.

From the scraps of information thus supplied by the Pundit to the press, he would appear to have achieved a feat not less surprising and interesting in its results than that so successfully accomplished in other directions by Arminius Vambery and by Captain Burton.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

LORD RANELAGH has been fined again for smoking in an English railway carriage. He says, in his defence, that when anti-smoking laws were made the habit was an exception; now it is the rule. The Prince of Wales smokes; the Duke of Cambridge smokes; several bishops smoke; Mr. Bright, Mr. Carlyle and Mr. Dickens smoke. As the majority smoke, it is only necessary to put on every train carriages in which smoking is forbidden, as they have in France carriages in every train into which men are forbidden to enter.

EPISCOPAL WIT.—Echoes from the Clubs says that when some young and excitable clergyman expressed a wish in the presence of the Bishop of Exeter that there were preachers in the Church of England as eloquent as Spurgeon, the prelate drily remarked: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's ass." The paper from which we quote very irreverently adds that if Episcopal development continues, there will be no need for such covetousness.

A LONDON correspondent, writing of Buckingham Palace, says, "however regal it may be within its exterior, it is certainly excelled by many a block of buildings in Fifth avenue, and is utterly eclipsed by Michigan Terrace, Chicago; indeed only the V. R. on the gateway and the assurance of a policeman convinced us that this was really the town residence of the Queen of Great Britain."

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

BATON ROUGE, March 14, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: We are prone to imagine that our troubles are greater than any others, and that the present are the hardest of all hard times. But a wider knowledge of history and a little reflection will often convince us that there is nothing new in our situation, and that history is constantly repeating itself. Indeed, it is often wonderful how exactly it does so. For example, the present situation of Louisiana finds almost an exact parallel in the condition of the same country in 1793 and 1794. Indigo had been to the inhabitants of that period what cotton has been to us. It had been destroyed by precisely the same causes, and this repeated loss of crops had brought upon the country, then a Spanish colony, embarrassments very similar to those under which we are now laboring. The country was saved and restored to prosperity then by the sugar cane, just as it seems destined to be saved and restored again. I have been greatly struck with the history of this period, as given by Hon. Charles Gayarre, in his "Essai Historique sur la Louisiane," published in 1831; and as I am not aware that this very interesting little book has ever been published in English, I have ventured to attempt and send you the following translation, believing that it cannot fail to be interesting to your readers.

J. O. F.

"While these works, (the Basin and Canal Carondelet,) so important by their public utility, were constructed at New Orleans, there was executed on the banks of the river, five miles above the city, an enterprise which ought to render the year 1794 forever memorable to Louisianians. This enterprise, so grand, so vast in its results, was the establishment of a sugar manufactory.

"Until then indigo had been the principal object on which the cultivators had bestowed their attention. On this plant reposed, in effect, all the hopes of Louisiana, and in some sort the prosperity and the existence of the colony. In the meantime the rapid vicissitudes of climate rendered this culture extremely precarious, and the cold and the heat, the rain and the drought, the ravages of storms, and the inundations of the Mississippi, frequently destroyed the fruit, the labors of the year. For a time the Louisianians had only to combat the elements; but in 1793 and 1794 innumerable swarms of hungry grasshoppers (sauterelles) covered the fields of the unfortunate cultivators, and devoured all the indigo. Thus this plant, that a persevering industry had with so much difficulty established in Louisiana, was almost completely destroyed by the multiplied attacks of these devouring insects. This enormous loss plunged the colony in despair.—The greater part of the inhabitants were deeply in debt, and knew not how to escape the ruin which appeared to them inevitable. Already they groaned, already they saw the approach of misery and famine, when one courageous man saved his fellow-citizens, and became the creator of that prosperity which Louisiana now enjoys.

"In 1766 an attempt had been made in Louisiana to manufacture sugar, but without success. Since that time the culture of the cane had been abandoned. Some individuals, however, continued to plant it in the environs of New Orleans, and sell it in the market. Among others two Spaniards, named Mendez and Solis, had recently enlarged their plantations. One of them made syrup, which he sold in kind; the other distilled the juice into spirituous liquor.

"Stephen Bore, born in Illinois, of an ancient family of Normandy, had passed the best years of his life in the service of France as captain of the black musketeers in the house of the king. Having espoused the daughter of Destrehan, former treasurer of Louisiana under the French government, he established himself in the Spanish colony. Like the other colonists, he had cultivated indigo, and had experienced the same fortune that weighed so heavily upon them. Almost ruined, he resolved to lose all or to restore his fortune by establishing a sugar manufactory. His relatives and friends joined their remonstrances to prevent him from perpetrating what they called an insane folly. In order to detor him his wife cast herself at his feet, bathed in tears. She observed to him that her father, Mr. Destrehan, had already attempted the culture of the cane, and had failed. She conjured him to profit by experience. She said that the feeble resources which remained to them would be exhausted by this new enterprise, and presented the affecting picture of a cherished family a prey to the most pressing necessity. Nothing could overcome the firm resolution of him who was to exercise so great an influence on the destinies of Louisiana. Mr. Bore purchased all the cane of Mendez and Solis, and commenced his plantations. Heaven blessed his efforts, and in 1796 he made a crop which produced him twelve thousand dollars.—This was at that time an enormous sum. Immediately all hastened to follow the example that courage and industry had given, and the culture of indigo everywhere gave place to that of the cane. From this moment a new era commenced for Louisiana. Her soil doubled in value to the cultivators, and as a colony she acquired tenfold weight in that political balance with which sovereigns weigh their dominions. Thus an event which was at first considered a public calamity was in effect a signal blessing of Providence. Thus is often verified that axiom of philosophy, that evil is often the source of good."

THE ASTRONOMERS BEFORE THE GREAT PYRAMID.

TRANSLATED FROM REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

From all time people have distrusted the interference of the exact sciences in the domain of historical criticism; it must be confessed that they had some reason for doing so, for mathematical certainty rests on bases and borrows processes of reasoning which are too narrow for the most likely and least contested events of the past. However, it is permitted to indulge in scientific speculations which endeavor to explain the indecisive testimonies of antiquity. It is on this title that we may judge worthy of attention the investigations of a Scotch astronomer, M. Piazzi Smith, on the origin and design of the pyramids, those curious monuments which have remained the most inexplicable of the hieroglyphics of Egyptian archæology.

Among the numerous pyramids which still stand in the valley of the Nile, the most high and perfect in construction is that which people usually designate by the name of the Great Pyramid of Djizeh, and which is distinguished from the others by special characteristics. It is, it seems, the most ancient; the Pharaoh Chafra or Chephren, who had it built, belonged to the second dynasty, and lived, it is affirmed, forty or sixty centuries ago. The masonry has been cut with so much art and care that it is with difficulty one can distinguish, even now, in the interior of the narrow passages which intersect it, the seams of the immense blocks of which it is composed. The granite and limestone are superposed in an apparently studied order; may not this association of different materials have an enigmatic sense which escapes us? In short, this great pyramid is pierced with inclined or horizontal galleries, chambers, obscure cavities in which certain combinations appear to have been sought after with particular care. Certainly it is not a shapeless mass, as one long believed it to be. Exact measurements have discovered exact proportions, relations of simple and uniform grandeur; on the whole, these rough stones, in spite of the heaviness and bulk of their first appearance, have a mysterious sense, real or emblematical, of which it is irritating not to discover the key. It is beside the most colossal and solid edifice which men have ever raised, so much so that innumerable periods of years have passed over it without sensibly changing its form and structure.

Archæologists, confining themselves to the consideration of it from the point of view which is habitual to them, have compared it with the other vestiges of Egyptian antiquity, and have concluded from it, not without plausible motives, that it was a tomb more ostentatious than the others. Such a mass could only, if we believe them, have been destined to protect for an indefinite time the mortal remains of the king who ordered its construction. This interpretation is justified by numerous analogies. There is, as in the most authentic tombs, the same care used in concealing the sarcophagus in an impenetrable retreat, in burring the issues to the sepulchral chamber, in concealing by ingenious precautions the retreat where death was to wait for the future resurrection. If there had existed no indications of another destination, it would have been lawful to affirm that was the only design of so gigantic a work; but how accord this hypothesis with the more precise indications which explorers, rule and quadrant in hand, have ended by discovering?

Let us examine first the principal data of this singular archæological problem. The base is a perfect square, or at least differs so little from one that it may be doubted whether the deviation between the theoretical and observed form is to be attributed to the negligence of the constructors or to the uncertainty of the process of measurement. The four sides are turned very exactly toward the four cardinal points, and the faces all present the same inclination. The successive layers, unequal between themselves, each preserve an uniform thickness on the circumference of the pyramid. The gallery, which is the only entrance to the monument and which prolongs itself in a right line to the subterranean chamber, is just as much inclined below the horizon as is above it the ascending gallery, which ends in the upper chambers. So far one could see in these different coincidences only proofs of the extreme care which the architect of the Pharaoh Chephren employed in his work. Here is what reveals better a secret intention. The descending gallery is turned almost toward the pole of the earth, and must have been, four or five thousand years ago, at the time of its construction, like the gigantic tube of a telescope directed on some shining star which played then the role of polar star. The pretended sarcophagus in granite, which the upper chamber conceals, has been cut in such a manner that the capacity of the inside is half the exterior volume. A final circumstance would be especially remarkable, if the state of dilapidation of the exterior of the edifice permitted the proof of its exact truth. The mathematical relation between the height of the pyramid and the side of the base is equal to the relation between the diameter and half the circumference of a circle, so that, if this fact was admitted as certain, we should have to admit also that the Egyptians knew at a very ancient epoch one of the important parameters of geometry.

These metrical results have appeared the more worthy of attention that no traces of them are found in the other pyramids. Little or large, they are not, as one would be tempted to believe, a faithful reproduction of the great one. One observes in them neither the same process of construction, nor so many internal cavities, nor the same relations of dimension. One would rather suspect that they were the work of more modern architects, who no longer knew how to interpret the enigmatic symbols which the old monument left before their eyes. This opinion seems the more probable that the image of the pyramid drawn in the hieroglyphics of a relatively recent epoch is only an undetermined triangle without any resemblance to the form of the primitive periods.

Must we believe with M. Piazzi Smith that the pyramid had in the beginning of Egyptian civilization a hidden meaning, the memory of which was afterward lost, or that the priests, the faithful guardians of the religious mysteries, never revealed to their contemporaries? What could, then, this meaning be? It is a question asked unumbers of times, and to which no satisfactory answer has yet been given. The common fault of the different interpretations, proposed so far, is that they only take count of certain characteristics of the edifice, and neglect others which are not less essential. It is the same reproach which has been brought against those who found in it only a royal tomb. As much might be said of the explanation proposed by Sir John Herschel, who saw in it only an observatory fit to show, at the distant epoch when it was constructed, the true direction of the polar star. An Egyptian astronomer, Mahmoud Bey, enunciated, not long ago, a new theory, founded, like the preceding, on the coincidence with a celestial phenomenon. According to him, it must have been a monument consecrated to a star of the constellation of the Dog, Sirius, which represented the god of the dead in the ancient Egyptian mythology. The pyramid was inclined in such a way that the beneficent rays of Sirius fell perpendicularly on the southern face of the pyramid. None of these suppositions renders a satisfactory account of the minute details of the interior structure. The intention of the architect was, without any doubt, less elementary and more complex; that is at least what the geometrical particularities of this gigantic work seem to reveal.

It is assuredly more legitimate to think that the Egyptian priests wished to figure by it under a sensible and nevertheless hidden form teachings relative to the religion, the manners or the sciences of their time. M. Piazzi Smith pretends, with many other archæologists, that the traditions which are buried in it have relation to the weights and measures then in use. The hypothesis is not new, but it rests on more certain data than those which have preceded it in this field of research. Thus the length of the base would represent a certain multiple of the unity of length, and this unity would be nothing else than the ten millionth part of the terrestrial diameter. The pretended sarcophagus, would be a unity of weight in relation with the density of the earth. Even the decimal numeration would be expressed in symbolical characters on several of the walls of the edifice. In a word, the Egyptians of four or five thousand years ago would have possessed a complete metrological system more perfect, we are told, than the metrical system of which we are so proud, and have engraved the indelible memory of it on this mass of stones. We should then have to suppose that they possessed an extensive knowledge of astronomy and physics. As to know whence so much science came to men whom Herodotus represents as very ignorant, M. Piazzi Smith contents himself with saying that they had received the notions of it by divine inspiration. It would be difficult for us to follow him so far. It is an irrational and inconsequential step to explain a mystery by a miracle.

If M. Piazzi Smith lets himself be carried too far in the way of deductions under the empire of an exclusive idea, there remains to him at least the merit of having advanced the study of the Great Pyramid by consecrating his leisure and his practical skill as an astronomer to the obtaining exact measures of this indecipherable monument. After the conscientious and sagacious researches of the French savans of the expedition of Egypt, after the persevering labors of Colonel Howard Vyse, who applied himself, thirty years ago, to the minute exploration of this stone colossus to its most secret recesses, there remained still much to be done. The subject is not exhausted, since these efforts have not ended in a solution of which the truth is evident. Perhaps the mystery will remain forever impenetrable, a manifest sign that the primitive peoples had ideas, acquaintances, prejudices, or sentiments which the modern mind, bewildered by the immense increase of civilization, is no longer apt to conceive. After braving revolutions and conquests, the ravages of time and atmosphere, and the more redoubtable attacks of the human races which have struggled at its feet during thousands of years, the Great Pyramid is still standing, an unique work in the world of grandeur and originality.

A DOUBLE OUTRAGE.

Rev. Henry Neal, a Southern Methodist preacher, was seized by a mob in East Tennessee, on the 9th of February last. Brother Neal is now in this city, and we have had the honor to see him, and hear from his own lips the story of his sufferings. He is a modest, but evidently resolute young man, and breathes in all he says a spirit of Christian patience, forbearance and charity, most remarkable. His efforts to do his work on his circuit were usually obstructed by armed mobs, but by courage and wisdom he had avoided personal outrage until the occasion referred to. His morning appointment was at Morgantown; his afternoon appointment some miles distant. He had previously received a short note from the class-leader of the M. E. Church, threatening him in mysterious phraseology, if he would continue to preach on that circuit. Arriving at the church, he found it filled with a rude assembly of whites and negroes. Several of them filled up the pulpit seats, and Bro. Neal was compelled to retire, as his little congregation could not get into the house. He went to a private house and preached. In the afternoon, as he went to his further appointment, he was seized by two armed men on the road, each of whom put a cocked pistol to his breast. Bro. Neal was pushed from the saddle, and as soon as he came to the ground a number of persons rushed from behind. He was blindfolded. A stone struck him on the head. His scalp was laid open by another blow from a hard body, probably the butt of a pistol. Bending and stunned, he was dragged some distance into the woods—stripped, tied to a tree—and two executioners, one on each side, beat him with heavy hickories, until blows ceased to be painful. He was then untied, compelled to lay with his face to the ground, and left to perish in the forest. The mob went on to the church, and with frightful oaths forbade any there to give food or shelter to Bro. Neal, under pain of death. Mangled, bleeding, almost fainting, he succeeded in reaching the road and a friendly house. This is the plain story. Bro. Neal suffered for no other reason, than that he was a Southern Methodist preacher; and the instigators of the outrage were only those who could profit by it—the Northern Methodist emissaries and followers, who are represented by Gov. Brownlow.

Now comes the most fearful part of the story. As far as we know, no Northern Methodist papers have taken any notice of this outrage perpetrated in their name and for their sake. Had a hickory been shaken at one of their negro poachers, the tumult of their uproar would have reverberated in Congress. But there is worse yet. The New York Observer does notice the outrage. That paper scarcely ever alludes to the Southern Methodist Church, though it has a column devoted to news from the churches—Roman Catholics, Universalists, Unitarians, all receive respectful mention; but the existence of Southern Methodism would hardly be known by reading that paper. So "Methodist" there means Methodist Episcopal. Now, we will show our readers how this Neal outrage was noticed, giving all the Methodist items for the week:

METHODIST.—A Methodist minister in Galesburg, Ill., recently noticed in meeting that the Black Crook was soon to be represented in Galesburg, and that a calico ball was soon to come off. He added that if any of his members wished to attend they must come to his house and have their names erased from the church list.

—A correspondent of the Methodist Protestant, writing from the Maryland district, says: "Three of our meetings were blessed with conversions—Abingdon, Union Chapel and Bel-Air—in the aggregate about thirty souls. And we shall have probably about as many additions to the church."

Rev Henry C. Neal, a Methodist preacher, was, on Sunday, the 9th inst., seized by a gang of ruffians while on his way to fill an appointment in Blount county, and cruelly whipped.

Of course every reader of the Observer understood that Neal is a Northern Methodist; and we solemnly charge the Observer with intending to make that impression. It is simply impossible that in such a case the word Southern could have been suppressed without design. We are sure that the "item" was prepared, not clipped; and it was smothered up, as it appears here, for the mean, base, wicked purpose of shielding the M. E. Church from odium. Accordingly we hear of three several instances in which Northern papers have published the account as an instance of outrage upon a Northern preacher; and one of these papers makes an indignant outcry, predicated upon this story, against the continued rebellion of the South, and calls for further measures of repression!—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

THE Island of Java must be a pleasant place to live in. According to the latest official statistics published, 143 persons were devoured by tigers in one year, and in another the same fate befell 131 persons. The crocodiles during the same period ate about 50 people a year, and between 30 and 40 a year were killed by serpents.

As an instance of the drooping condition of the foreign trade of the United States, it is reported that in the South Pacific coasting trade, of which the people of the United States should enjoy the largest share, there is not a single American steamer, and only a few sailing vessels, while England has a fleet of some twenty-five steamers.

NAPOLEON has $7,500,000 a year for spending money; Francis Joseph half as much; King William $3 000,000, and Victoria even less.

AN original copy of the National Covenant of Scotland, signed in 1635, is preserved at Inverness. Twenty of the names are signed in blood.

THE OUTSIDE PREACHER.

Uvalde, eighty miles west of San Antonio, is the outside circuit, and the Rev. Wm. J. Joyce the outside preacher—the last man westward. A late letter from him informs me that he has formed his circuit, has penetrated after the settlers into the upper valley of the Rio Frio, and is endeavoring to preach the gospel and plant the church in the populations gathering about the military posts. With Brothers Potter and Fancett and DeVilbiss he is doing a work on the frontier of West Texas that reads like romance in the annals of Kentucky and Tennessee Methodism of seventy-five years ago. They are led by a presiding elder, Thornberry, accustomed to preach to settlers who, eager to hear the word, bring their guns with them and tie their horses close to the house, lest they should be stolen by Indians. He was preaching to such a congregation last year at night, when the twang of the bow was heard, and next morning it was found that the Camanche had killed a cow in wanton defiance. The word of the Lord is precious in those parts. One man followed the presiding elder around for eleven days, improving the privilege of hearing the gospel; and not in vain; for in that time he had heard seventeen sermons. Two unprotected women traveled seventy miles on horseback to attend a quarterly meeting. I have never so felt the pain of an almost empty missionary treasury as when supplying this work. Men are willing to go upon a bare subsistence. I would enlist for this difficult field the missionary help of the connection, and I claim for these standard-bearers the prayers of God's people everywhere. A few years back, and some of the pleasantest possessions of the church were in the same condition.

I give an extract form Brother Joyce's letter, dated March 2:

* * * "I have just returned from my first quarterly meeting. A few dollars a month is all that is necessary for my support, and yet with a circuit 450 miles round I cannot command those dollars. My horse, though as stout as the most of the Caballada, is unequal to the task. I have received $5 50 since I have been on the circuit, but the brethren say I shall not suffer, and I believe them. I am not discouraged, though I am embarrassed. Two persons joined the church at the quarterly meeting, and much interest was manifested by the people. Brother Thornberry and myself tried to get a company through the mountains, on our return—he to Bandera and I to Dahnis; but the people were so busy we could not insist. So we traveled three miles together, and with "The Lord defend thee," we separated, he to travel thirty-one miles with a single six shooter before reaching another house, and I seventeen miles with one house intervening. I have not heard from him, and feel some uneasiness, as the Indians are frequently in the country. I am cordially received by the people. One man, a professed free-thinker, swore he would not hear me preach without paying, and gave me $2. Another said, "Come and get a cow." I have heard from Brother Potter. He is gloriously encouraged. He has the clay upon the wheel, and is trying to mould his first success into a church-building, and is succeeding."

Beyond this frontier, keeping the military road to the Mesilla Valley, there opens up a quieter and even more inviting field. I have in my portfolio the plan of a circuit, which was made upon consultation with those who, as chaplains and soldiers, had visited that country, and made a beginning. Said one, who had met American emigrants there, and had preached and witnessed their readiness to receive and support the gospel, "If I had no family I would rather go there than anywhere else in the world. I would need only enough money to bear my expenses to the place—the people would support me." A great and effectual door for the church is open, and soon a half-way house would be established to our Pacific brethren. If any young man, or single man, in the old and crowded Conferences, is stirred to undertake this work of holy emprise, and to go into the regions beyond, where Christ has hardly been named, and lay the foundations of the church, I will gladly put him in possession of the appointment and the plan.—Bishop McTyeire's Letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate.

SUBSTITUTE FOR COFFEE.—In Germany the seeds of grapes are frequently used in place of the coffee berry. When pressed they yield a quantity of oil, and afterward, when boiled, furnish a very economical and, it is said, a delicious substitute for the genuine Mocha.

JUST as the safety of Dr. Livingstone is becoming a certainty, the report comes from New Zealand that there is a strong probability that Leichard, the explorer, long supposed to be lost, is still alive near the Gulf of Carpentaria.

POST OFFICE ORDERS.

Whenever our agents can get these orders we hope they will take the pains to do so, paying for them out of the money in hand.

N. B.—Money sent in small amounts in letters is much safer than in large.

REVIVAL AT SELMA.

The Lord has most powerfully revived his work in Selma. We are glad to record the clear shining of the Sun of Righteousness where it rises upon our land with healing in his wings. The work still continues. May it spread as fire in a stubble field! The account will be seen in the letter from Brother McVoy.

PRAYER FOR MORE LABORERS.—We ask the special attention of our people in Mississippi and Louisiana to the timely and important communication of our venerable brother, the Rev. J. G. Jones.

TEXAS, ALABAMA AND ARKANSAS.—Each of these States has succeeded in rejecting the instrument called the Constitution, which was framed for their degradation. By the Providence of God it may be that our State will escape the pit which is dug for her.

THE HOME MONTHLY, for March, is unusually entertaining. We can recommend it to all the families of our people cordially. Rev. R. J. Harp will fill orders promptly.

IN LIGHT.

The heavenly state is described as "the inheritance of the saints in light." Nearly all the manifestations, to our senses, of the spirit world have been made by light. It is the element of that fearless and exalted being. Whether God or angels, or glorified men, are exhibited, they are revealed in luminous garments, and appareled in a brilliance which exceeds the solar ray. Dispensations make no difference with reference to this fact. The burning bush, the presence over the mercy seat, and between the cherubim, the Saviour's annunciation, the transfiguration, the arrest and conviction of Saul of Tarsus, and the scenes in the Apocalypse, illustrate this singular uniformity in the manifestation of the divine and heavenly condition. The phenomena of Christian experience, and especially of the death hour, are associated with these glimpses of the unseen. What is that sensible vividness of light which so often dazzles the yet perfect vision of the dying saint? God is described as "dwelling in light which no man can approach unto," and his angel ministers are "a flaming fire."

Not altogether as a symbol is light ascribed to this higher state, but it is to be regarded as a real element, and as pervading the glowing atmosphere of locality as well as state. In our conceptions of heaven we cannot altogether separate the material from the spiritual. Christ is there in the body, and others also; and whatever and wherever it may be, it must be, even now, adapted to those who shall be raised and changed in the resurrection. The purest and fullest life, the largest and most varied enjoyment, and the sublimest images and emotions come to us through the eye. We cannot think of melody in heaven as satisfying to a refined intelligence, only as it vibrates in waves of atmosphere transcendentally luminous. Imagine the golden harps to be tuned and touched in darkness! It is the morning that wakes up the music of nature, and the spheres seem to sing because they shine.

As the symbol of spiritual things we inevitably feel the power of contrast in this description of the better land. Our earthly condition, in comparison, must be dark. Here, though the spirit is willing, the flesh is weak. The brain reels under the task of thought, and the achievements of the understanding are limited by the infirmities of the organ through which the soul acts. What will be the strength and grasp of the mental faculties when unchained, and when no longer fettered by these earthly conditions? Now "we see through a glass darkly." The Bible has left something to be revealed in the world to come. There are secret things now; there are things partially disclosed; and there are yet other things, declared, which we cannot comprehend. The mystery of evil and of foreknowledge, the depths of God, the full import and reach of the atonement, and the economy of spirit and immortal being, are matters not now to be perfectly apprehended.

In the providential government God moves in a mysterious way. "Should it be according to thy mind?" We stand reproved, and humbly wait. But we do wish to know, and we struggle to solve the dark problems. The infinite goodness is often darkly disguised, the throne seems to be shadowed, and the righteous sceptre thrown away. We would be fools to say even in our hearts that "there is no God;" but we realize that "He maketh darkness his secret place, and his pavillion round about him are dark waters and thick clouds of the sky." Saints in darkness describes our present condition. We cannot see, we cannot comprehend.

The desire for light is however prophetical of its ultimate bestowal. In heaven there are some things we shall be content not to know, but mainly what is dark to us now will there be revealed. "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Those things which have troubled and perplexed shall be flooded with light. It will be like going out of a dark room into the summer noon. In this life the Christian is shut up to a life of faith; he walks by faith; sight is reserved for the future.

And this state of wonderful unfoldings is only the complement of the holiness and happiness which light implies. To the inhabitants of heaven sin will be a matter of memory and history: something which was as to themselves, and which still exists in an outer and distant world. Its dark shadow never falls there, and its taint touches no robe. There is somewhat that is fearful in the contact and possibility of sin here, and there is pain in the scenes which it spreads around us. Sinless describes negatively. Heaven is the perfection of beauty because it is the beauty of holiness. Happiness is inwoven with the revelations and purity of this blessed existence. "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." "Fullness of joy and pleasures forever more." Here we ever thirst, here we find alloy in every pleasure. The best condition is discounted by some trouble. It is a mixed state where sorrows and joys mingle. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan." With our sunshine we have clouds and storms. "In light," absolutely only in heaven.

Not alone is it pleasant to our hopes to think thus of the promised land. It strengthens the weary pilgrim, amidst the discouragements of the way, to

> "More than taste the heavenly powers,
> And antedate that day."

But how much do we think of heaven as the present home of friends who have passed away? "The saints in light!" There they are. We do not go down into the darkness of the grave, nor linger about the tombs, but we follow them from the hour they struggled into life, up into the realms of eternal day. They have not seen death, neither do we see death in them. They passed not into darkness but into light. It was really out of darkness into something more than the marvellous light of God. What clearness of vision, what transparent purity, what employments and what emotions must be theirs!

THE SOLDIER'S VISION.

Among the greatest of God's mercies are those refreshings vouchsafed to a dying Christian—as if he partook of fruits brought from Paradise by the angels who have come for him. In this week's ADVOCATE there is an account of a soldier, a native of Louisiana, who died in 1862, in the neighborhood of Island Number Ten. He was an exemplary Christian, and was ready to go, regretting only that he must die so far from his loved ones. As he came to the very passage of death, lo! his beloved wife and children stood around him! He called them each by name, and with words of encouragement and counsel bade them one by one farewell. The physician and attendants wept as through his eye they realized the vision of his home. In this sweet converse with the dearest objects of his life he expired. The beautiful conception of Campbell:

> "My little ones kissed me a thousand times o'er," vanished with the night;

> "But sorrow returned with the dawning of morn,
> And the voice in my dreaming ear melted away;"

but when the full morning came to this soldier the vision of his home had melted away into the boundless glories of heaven.

THE CROPS.

From all sides the news is highly favorable to the coming crops. The seasons have been most propitious. The Lord of the harvest waits to do us good:

> "Every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile."

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.—BLACKMAN'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—Mr. B. inserts an advertisement this week. He is a thorough, competent, industrious, and conscientious teacher. We should be glad if it were so we could send to him ourself.

THE RADICAL BRIDE.

The Methodist Church of the North has plighted her troth to the Radical party. She has fully espoused, for better for worse, the principles and the policy of the caucus now reigning at Washington. And the politicians have entered into the alliance with passionate warmth. Early in the war Bishop Simpson visited the President to assert the claims of Methodism to a place in the councils of the government. As a church it had sustained the Federal arms and policy, and now as a church it demanded the reward and recognition of its faithfulness. Mr. Lincoln admitted the justice of the demand, and Mr. Harlan became a member of the President's cabinet. Here a great door and effectual was opened to the brethren which they were not slow to enter. It was quite a new field to a body of ministers which, more than any other, had preached deadness to the world, its amusements, its fashions, its ambition. A desire to sustain the Union and patriotic loyalty were declared to be not merely next to godliness, but an essential part of it. Religion and loyalty became convertible terms. "Is he loyal?" was incorporated permanently into the terms of membership. Thereupon Bishop Ames conceived loyalty as big as a meeting house. He obtained letters from the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, and started forth upon an enterprise which for zeal and novelty has rendered him immortal among patriots. He ransacked and sacked every church, Sunday school library, and negro congregation of the M. E. Church, South, that could safely be found within the lines. It is said that when he got back, emptied his bag, and said to the President, with a flourish, "See my zeal for the Lord," Mr. Lincoln responded, "We do not propose to run the churches."

This little episode was carried on by the Northern Methodist Church pretty much on private account, and it made a very good thing out of it. The bishop carried along with him a pack of worn out Northern pulpit stars, who were ready for anything that promised bread and a sensation. These he distributed, and relieved one part of the country at the expense of another. The most of them supplied an article of preaching sufficiently edifying to congregations made up largely of army contractors, government detectives, stragglers, and all that mass of adventurers which like hyenas live upon the offal of an invading force. With a large flag overhead, a few fourth-of-July passages at command, an occasional announcement from the pulpit of another glorious victory, and a little gospel, they became not only acceptable but really popular. It seemed as if the right men had at last found the right place. They made themselves useful in a variety of ways, and gave much valuable information to provost marshals, which probably could only have been collected by an ever-attentive and entertaining pastor. In truth the day of judgment alone will disclose all that these gentlemen did for the church, the country and themselves.

Things went on so delightfully that this Ames brigade could have sacrificed themselves forever; and when the war ended they declared that it "had ended a year too soon." The process of disgorgement was doubtless painful to men as truly patriotic as they had proved themselves to be. It was the severest test to which their loyalty had ever been subjected. We saw one of them under an active emetic of President Johnson's; he was severely emptied, yet like the dog in the Greek fable, threw up nothing black. The close of the war did not send men home who had nothing to go to, and who might still do a little profitable business in the way of supplying information, founding colored orphan asylums, colored theological institutes, and taking up collections among colored people. They remain in the South, largely sustained by the prayers and contributions of their Northern brethren.

This powerful combination of political and ecclesiastical interest is next seen in the tableaux vivant of Mr. Stanton and Bishop Simpson sitting in the War Department, conferring together by the hour, while the Secretary of the President is in vain trying to get past the sentinels at the door.

It is announced with much satisfaction that on the very day that Mr. Stanton hermetically sealed himself in the War office the Northern Methodist bishop called to comfort and assure him, and that subsequently Bishop Ames called and added his admiration and encouragement to the Secretary's coup d'etat.

The next official item is that which appears in this week's telegrams, to wit:

BOSTON, March 30.—During the session of the Conference of the New England Methodist Episcopal Church, the Committee on the Country, through Rev. Gilbert Haven, reported resolutions indorsing impeachment and eulogizing Gen. Grant and Secretary Stanton for their patriotic conduct. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and it was resolved to send copies to the Speaker of the House, President of the Senate, Stanton, Grant and Chief Justice Chase.

The public was hardly prepared to expect any expression of opinion upon this subject from a body of men whose avowed only object in life is "to spread scriptural holiness." In going so far out of their proper track it would seem that they are not so desirous to maintain justice as they are to secure the conviction of the President, by pronouncing against him in advance. Evidently these divines "have forsaken the right way and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam."

This unanimity of the M. E. Church North, and warmth of sentiment in favor of the impeachment of the President, and in favor of everything the caucus does in Congress and elsewhere, indicates to our mind that the great body of its membership and clergy have espoused for better, for worse, for life and death, the now dominant party, and that the Radical party has with equal devotion promised to honor and cherish during its existence the Northern M. E. Church.

The Constitution of Louisiana.

The Constitution about to be submitted to the people of Louisiana, expresses in full measure the purposes of men who are the enemies of the State. All over it are the marks of that violence and rage which are ready to sacrifice the happiness of multitudes, the liberty of the citizen, and the best instincts of the race to the gratification of revenge. It denies to thousands those rights which in other Christian countries are accorded by conquerors to the conquered. It forces the white man politically under the feet of the negro just out of slavery, and socially attempts to place him in the school room, and in all public places in an intimate and equal association with ourselves, our wives and our children. We do not believe that it is for the interest of the colored man that this state of things should be, nor that he desires it. It could only end in arraying races against each other whose welfare consists in mutual peace.

When we consider the imminent danger there is that this instrument will be adopted, it is the duty of every one who can to register and vote against it, and against every man who has lent himself to the work of framing it.

The madness of those who propose to get up a ticket, called the Democratic, and who yet claim to be the friends of the State, we have no language to characterize. They are blinded by selfishness, a selfishness which sacrifices the State for a thousand years to the pleasure of putting a friend in office.

If those who vote will vote against the Constitution, vote that, and that only, they may succeed. The two wings of the Black Republican party will keep each other away from the polls in sufficient numbers to defeat the Constitution, unless they are forced to coalesce by the presence of a third ticket. May the Lord defeat this great and iniquitous scheme of oppression called the Constitution of Louisiana.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

FAYETTE, MISS., March 21, 1868.

DEAR BRETHREN: Permit me to call your attention to the fact that our late Conference passed a resolution recommending all our ministers and members to observe the first Friday in May next as a day of fasting and united prayer to the Great Head of the church "to send forth more laborers into his harvest." Our Conference is in a crippled condition. A number of our most talented and useful ministers have gone to other Conferences, and some to foreign countries. Many others have been so involved in the common ruin of our country that they cannot, for the present, render the effective labor they once did in the pastoral work and support their families; while a few, we fear, are studying to do as little ministerial work as they can, and yet maintain their position in the ministry. The interests of the church are evidently suffering in too many places from the want of regular and faithful ministerial labor. What else can we do in such circumstances than earnestly and unitedly "pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers?" Let us call the attention of our people everywhere to the observance of this day of solemn fasting and prayer for this great and glorious purpose. Would it not be well to have public religious services on that day in all our churches as far as practicable?

Your's affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

The minutes of the Montgomery Conference have all been sent to the subscribers. If they have failed to get them, the fault is in the mails. Many of the preachers failed to give their post offices, but I sent to them by advice or guess.

SECRETARY.

THE OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—The city begins to show some signs of life on the railroad question once more. The city press occasionally gets off an article on the subject. The capitalists begin to see that New Orleans is losing millions for want of that road. The Western railroad men are flanking New Orleans and will soon snatch Texas from her if she sleeps and dreams much longer.

A committee has been appointed by the directors of the Opelousas Railroad to receive propositions from capitalists and contractors to build the road, and to consider the various plans proposed. The strongest men of New Orleans are moving in the matter. They may fail to do anything, but we have faith that something will be done.

The public and the press do not seem to at all appreciate the importance of this road. It is to be the base of operations and key to almost everything between the Mississippi and the Rio Grande. Nature has left but one practicable route for a railroad between Texas and New Orleans, and that route is through this parish. A road cannot be built either higher or lower down. And when built this road must be the route in all future ages. From this base or main trunk numerous branches must extend into the northern part of Texas and Arkansas, and connect with lines of road in the great West. The amount of produce, trade and travel that will naturally fill up this road must be enormous. It cannot possibly be otherwise. And if the salt mine on Avery's island is extensively worked, which is bound to be the case, the salt interest alone will amount to millions of dollars to the railroad and the country. Cars would be run from the mine into Algiers without changing, and immense trains would be loaded with this valuable article. It has been decided that this is far more economical than sending the salt to market by way of the Gulf.

So we believe the railroad will be built, and the salt mine will be worked in the next few years, long before middle-aged men begin to turn gray.—Planter's Banner.

MUSICAL DOINGS.—Since Mr. Horace Waters gave up publishing sheet music he has devoted his whole capital and attention to the manufacture and sale of pianos and melodeons. He has just issued a catalogue of his new instruments, giving a new scale of prices, which show a marked reduction from former rates, and his pianos have recently been awarded the first premium at several fairs. We happen to know that his instruments earned him a good reputation long before expositions, and the "honors" connected therewith, were ever thought of. Indeed, we have one of Mr.

Waters' pianos now in our residence (where it has stood for years,) of which any manufacturer in the world might well be proud. We have always been delighted with it as a sweet-toned and powerful instrument, and there is no doubt of its durability; more than this, some of the best amateur players in the city, as well as several celebrated pianists, have performed on the said piano, and all pronounce it a superior and first-class instrument. Stronger indorsement we could not give. Mr. Waters is well known among the readers of our paper as the editor and publisher of the "Sabbath School Bell," of which over one million copies have been sold.—Home Journal. p.

AN ELECTION ORDERED.

A RESIDENCE OF TEN DAYS REQUIRED.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST., New Orleans, La., March 25, 1868.

Special Orders No. 63.

1. By an act of Congress, which became a law March 12, 1868, it is enacted, "That hereafter any election authorized by the act passed March 23, 1867, entitled 'an act supplementary to 'an act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,' passed March 2, 1867, and to facilitate their restoration,' shall be decided by a majority of the votes actually cast; and at the election in which the question of the adoption or rejection of any constitution is submitted, any person duly registered in the State may vote in the election district where he offers to vote when he has resided therein for ten days next preceding such election, upon representation of his certificate of registration, his affidavit, or other satisfactory evidence, under such regulations as the district commanders may prescribe;" and

"That the constitutional convention of any of the States mentioned in the acts to which this is amendatory, may provide that at the time of voting upon the ratification of the constitution, the registered voters may vote also for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and for all elective officers provided for by said Constitution; and the same election officers who shall make the return of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution, shall enumerate and certify the votes cast for members of Congress."

In accordance with the terms of this act, an election will be held in the State of Louisiana for members of the House of Representatives of the United States, and for such State, judicial, parish and municipal officers and members of the General Assembly as are provided for by the constitution to be submitted to the people for ratification.

This election will be in all respects a part of the election heretofore ordered in Special Orders No. 55, dated March 11, 1868, from these headquarters, subject only to such modifications as may be required by the above mentioned act of Congress.

Any person duly registered in the State of Louisiana may vote in any election district, ward or precinct, provided he has resided for ten days, next preceding the election, in the district, ward or precinct where he offers to vote, upon presentation of his certificate of registration, or, in case of his having lost such certificate, upon his affidavit of his registration, in which shall be set forth the fact of such loss, and that he has not voted before at the present election, or upon such other evidence of these facts as may be satisfactory to the commissioners of election.

The ballots to be cast "for" or "against" the constitution shall have on them—printed or in writing—the names of the several officers voted for under its provisions, and the returns of the election will be made to the commanding general, as directed in paragraph 5, of Special Orders No. 55, above referred to.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF, Assistant Adjutant General.

IF the pope holds out two years longer he will have sat on the pontifical throne for a period exceeding that of any of his two hundred and fifty or sixty predecessors.

OBITUARIES.

JARRET B. LAW.

"The evil that men do lives after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones."

"The works of the righteous do follow them."

Thirty years ago, at an old country school in Mississippi, among the boys who came from the surrounding settlements was a bright-eyed youth, the son of a widow, spare built and rather delicate, with features almost girlish. In those days the youth of both sexes attended, nor were students mere children; many young men and women came to drink at the founts of wisdom, for opportunity was not within the reach of all.

It was the good fortune of the writer to be a schoolmate of this widow's son for several years, until the boy grew to be almost a man. His life took its coloring from the lessons his mother taught him. Ere he reached manhood his mother died. But though an orphan, he was not left friendless. Fortune favored him; his earthly guardian proved friend and brother; nor were the prayers of his departed mother unavailing. He continued to walk in the way that she had trained him, until he grew to the stature of manhood, in Christ Jesus. Here on Red river circuit was the field of his modest Christian labors; here he married and lived until his State called on her sons to defend her constitutional rights. As a companion, friend, citizen, neighbor, husband, father and Christian gentleman, he was a model. If he had an enemy on earth it was unknown to him and his associates; save the great enemy of virtue and innocence.

Wherever duty called he went, and believing it his duty, though dissuaded by neighbors and friends, he buckled on his armor and went to reinforce our brethren who were environed at Island No. Ten. Soon we were in camps far removed from home and its comforts. Instead of the solemn peals of the Sabbath bell, our ears were greeted with the deafening echoes of exploding shells. But amid the booming of cannon, the hardships, duties and privations of soldier life this man was the same rejoicing Christian, the cool and determined soldier. The exposure was too great for him. His physical system, naturally frail, gave way, he gradually became weaker with camp fever, was removed (too late) to the house of a good Samaritan, named Jordan, in Lauderdale county, Tennessee, where the hands of a Christian brother and his family kindly and gently ministered to his last earthly wants.

When about to die, or rather "live again," he expressed regret that he could not see his dear wife and darling children. Suddenly he seemed to be dreaming, unconscious of weeping comrades and surgeon; his family were there! Oh the cordial greeting he gave them, bade them one by one adieu, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. Was this a mere delusion, or was he permitted, because of his faith and obedience, to have this last earthly request granted?

Thus lived and died Jarret D. Law. On the 18th day of April, 1862, his body was decently interred in a church yard, near Fort Pillow, Tennessee. Born in South Carolina in 1825; came to Wilkinson county, Mississippi, with his parents when but a child; there arrived at manhood. Came to Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, in 1846, where he married; left a wife and five children to follow him to the "better land." Should I ever reach the city of the New Jerusalem, there I expect to strike hands with my sainted brother, the friend of my life, my spiritual mentor.

EXPLANATION.

The above figures give the exact number of Subscribers received per day, for ten days past, by the publishers of the American Agriculturist, and the work has gone on in the same ratio for a long time. The circulation went up to 150,000 last year, and the subscriptions so far this year are very largely in excess of that or any previous year!

What Does it Mean?

Why, simply this, that the former readers, who have tried and proved the Agriculturist, are so convinced of its great value that they not only continue taking it for themselves, but induce their friends and neighbors to take it also.—Could there be any better evidence of its real value?

An Edition of 159,000

copies was required in 1867. At the rate of increase for a month past the subscription list of the American Agriculturist for 1868 will reach 200,000 to 250,000.

1,000,000 Copies,

at least, and probably 3,000,000 copies, would be wanted this year if everybody should take the Agriculturist who would be profited by its perusal, ten times the small cost.

The Truth Is,

nowhere else can you get so much real value for so little money as you find in the American Agriculturist—so much for yourself—so much for your wife—so much for your children—whether you live in the city, or in a village, or in the country—whether you be farmer, or gardener, or mechanic, or merchant, or minister, or lawyer, or whatever be your pursuit.

Of Engravings,

the Agriculturist contains a large number (150 to 400 in each volume,) the most beautiful and instructive published in any journal in this or any other country. The cost of the engravings alone exceeds Ten Thousand Dollars each year. They are finely executed, beautifully printed, and are both pleasing and instructive. The engravings are alone worth a great many times the subscription price of the paper.

Of Original Information,

For the HOUSEHOLD,
For the CHILDREN,
For the ORCHARD,
For the GARDEN,
For the FARM,
&c., &c.,

the Agriculturist is packed brim-full. It is not a cheaply-gathered, scissors-and-paste-make-up of a paper, but the publishers employ a large force of the most intelligent and practical first-class men to be found in the country. These all devote their time and energy to gathering from every possible source just such information as the people need. It is their ambition and pride to print no line that is unreliable, and to condense the greatest possible amount of useful information into the least possible space. That they succeed in doing this is fully proved by the immense number of persons that continue year after year to take and read the American Agriculturist. It has now entered upon its Twenty-seventh year, and enjoys a circulation probably exceeding the combined circulation of all other rural periodicals, not only in this country, but in the world!

Reader,

You are invited to TRY the American Agriculturist for 1868. You will find it to pay, and pay well. It costs but $1 50 for the whole year, or four copies for $5. Its immense circulation divides the cost of editing, engravings, type setting, office expenses, etc., among so many that it can be supplied at this low rate. TRY IT!

Landreth's Warranted Garden Seeds.

PRIVATE FAMILIES WHO AIM to raise vegetables of the best quality only need not to be reminded that "figs do not grow on thistles," nor that from good seed alone can good vegetables be obtained.

Seeds may, indeed, grow freely enough, but unless they prove good in every respect it were better they had not grown at all. The seeds offered by us being mainly the produce of Bloomsdale, raised under our own personal supervision, with the aid of years of practical experience, we are enabled to speak with entire confidence as to their quality, and of the reasonable probability of satisfactory results.

☞ We have but few "Novelties" to offer. Our experience, obtained at some cost, is that out of the multitude of that class of vegetables advertised for sale, in most cases the good are not new, and the new are not good. Substantial, staple, well-known sorts are in the main the most reliable.

Purchasers who do not reside within ready access of the city, nor near merchants or druggists who vend our seeds, can be supplied by mail, postpaid. Priced Catalogues, for family use, with the Rural Register for 1868 (abounding in useful hints,) will be mailed, without charge, to all who apply enclosing a three-cent stamp. THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE GOLDEN GATE.

Would my little daughter know
Where the peaceful waters flow,
Where the sweetest flowers grow
Along the path of life?
Where the meadows are more green,
Where the brightest birds are seen,
Where the skies are all serene,
And where there is no strife?

Yonder is the "Golden Gate,"
All around the angels wait,
There the narrow path is straight;
My daughter, enter in.
Here the Shepherd feeds his sheep,
Here the lambs securely sleep,
Here's a fountain pure and deep,
To wash away our sin.

Near there is a broader way,
Where the thoughtless and the gay
Throw their priceless souls away,
Forgetful of their God.
There the gate is opened wide,
And the tempter stands aside,
Luring on the thoughtless tide
Adown the dreadful road.

Daughter, turn not to the right
Nor the left; but in the light
Of the gospel, pure and bright,
Seek to be forgiven.
Enter through the "Golden Gate,"
Where the angels gently wait,
Where the narrow path is straight,
Leading up to heaven.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"ARE YOU GOD'S WIFE?"

Mr. Editor: I remember to have read, years agone, the touching incident with the above caption. Then I only saw the young, shivering, hungry child; was glad because of the warm, true heart that generously fed her, and was pleasantly impressed with the sacred simplicity of the little creature's artless inquiry. Now that I have grown older, and you revive it in your estimable paper, as I read it again, the impression left is deeper and wider. My mind does not now leave the little stranger

"Alone in the wide, wide world,
Christless, motherless she,
Begging and struggling to live, and whirled
Like a waif on an angry sea."

But "are you God's wife?" from those poor hungry lips awakens a sympathy that follows her home, and instead of an uncouth hovel, with forbidding aspect, I see her enter a rude shanty, to be sure, but about the door-way I see unusual cleanliness, bits of shells, boxes of hydrangea and delicate cypress, curling lovingly up the fresh-spun lattice. I go in with the child, and there by the little window, with "stitch, stich, from morning, noon, till night," sits her pale mother; and on the opposite side of the scantily-furnished but neatly attired bed lies the Book of all books, on a rough-hewed stand, half hid by a dainty bit of worn coverlet.

I see them at night—that lone widow and her orphaned child—and kneeling, weary and worn, communing with God, and resting from harm in His love. They quietly fall asleep, while dreamers on velvet and down have no such slumbers as come to the tired frames of this struggling mother and her "one ewe lamb." No wonder, then, that she, who had learned so much of God's goodness from a sanctified parent, should naively ask if the kind heart that beat 'neath silken bodice held not some companionship with his holy presence. Oh! why do not our more favored ones thus beautifully retain the guileless impressions of childhood? Alas! alas!

"And strange that flowers of earth
Are visited by every air that stirs,
And drink in sweetness only, while the child,
That sheds with big its breast a bloom for heaven,
May take a blemish from the breath of love,
And bear the blight forever!"

TIDE MARKS.

It was tide when we went down to Bristol, and the great, gray rocks stood up, bare and grim, above the water; but high up, on all their sides, was a black line that seemed hardly dry, though it was far above the water.

"What makes that black on the rocks?" I asked of my friend.

"O, that is the tide mark," she replied. "Every day, when the tide comes in, the water rises and rises, until it reaches that line, and in a great many years it has worn away the stone until the mark is cut into the rock."

"O," thought I, "that is all, is it?" Well, I have seen a great many people that carried tide marks on their faces. Right in front of me was a pretty little girl, with delicate features, and pleasant blue eyes. But she had some queer little marks on her forehead, and I wondered how they came to be there, until presently her mother said:

"Shut down the blind now, Carrie, the sun shines right in baby's face."

"I want to look out," said Carrie, in a very peevish voice.

But her mother insisted, and Carrie shut the blind, and turned her face away from the window. O dear me! what a face it was! The blue eyes were full of frowns instead of smiles, the pleasant lips were drawn up in an ugly pout, and the queer little marks on the forehead had deepened into actual wrinkles.

"Poor little girl," I thought, "how bad you will feel when you grow up, to have your face marked all over with the tide marks of passion;" for these evil tempers leave their marks just as surely as the ocean does, and I have seen many a face stamped so deeply with self will and covetousness that it must carry the marks to the grave.

Take care, little folks! and whenever you give way to bad temper, remember the "tide marks."—Lu, in Little Corporal.

The Preservation of Leather.

A contributor to the Shoe and Leather Reporter gives some valuable hints in relation to the preservation of leather. The extreme heat to which most men and women expose their boots and shoes during winter deprives the leather of its vitality, and renders it liable to break and crack. Patent leather, particularly, is often destroyed in this manner. When leather becomes so warm as to give off the smell of leather, it is singed. Next to the singing caused by fire heat, is the heat and dampness caused by the covering of rubber. Close rubber shoes destroy the life of leather.

Shoe leather is generally abused in polishing it. Persons know nothing or care less about the kind of material used than they do about the polish produced. Vitriol blacking is used until every particle of the oil in the leather is destroyed. To remedy this abuse the leather should be washed once a month with warm water, and when about half dry a coat of oil and tallow should be applied, and the boots set aside for a day or two. This will renew the elasticity and nie the leather, and when thus used upper leather will seldom crack or break.

The practice of washing harness in warm water and with soap is very damaging. If a coat of oil is put on immediately after washing the damage is repaired. No harness is ever so soiled that a damp sponge will not remove the dirt; but, even when the sponge is applied, it is always useful to add a slight coat of oil by the use of another sponge. All varnishes and all blacking containing the properties of varnish should be avoided. Ignorant and indolent hostlers are apt to use such substances on their harness as will give the most immediate effect, and these, as a general thing, are most destructive to the leather. When harness loses its luster and turns brown, which almost any leather will do after long exposure to the air, the harness should be given a new coat of grain black. Before using this grain black, the grain surface should be thoroughly washed with potash water until all the grease is killed, and, after the application of the grain black, oil and tallow should be applied to the surface. This will not only "fasten the color," but make the leather flexible. Harness which is grained can be cleaned with kerosene or spirits of turpentine, and no harm will result if the parts affected are washed and oiled immediately afterward.

Band leather is often improperly oiled. When oil is applied to belting dry, it does not spread uniformly, and does not incorporate itself with the fibers as when partly dampened with water. The best way to oil a belt is to take it from the pulleys and immerse it in a warm solution of tallow and oil. After allowing it to remain a few moments the belt should be immersed in water heated to one hundred degrees, and instantly removed.—American Artisan.

Death of Sir David Brewster.—This venerable savant, whose death occurred in London on the 10th inst., was born in Jedburg, Scotland, in the year 1781, and had consequently attained the age of eighty-six years. His great fame was acquired by his discoveries in the department of optics; the invention of the kaleidoscope and the knowledge of what is called the polarization of light being due to his genius and research. He was also an author of no little industry, having edited the Edinburgh Journal of Sciences for many years, and having contributed much important matter to the Edinburgh Encyclopædia. His name is familiar to all students of natural sciences, and his loss will be regretted by them throughout the world.

FARM AND GARDEN.

PROGRESS OVERDOING ITSELF.

AGRICULTURE, HORTICULTURE, STOCK-BREEDING.

An exchange, in discussing the great "improvement" in agriculture and its collateral branches, presents some rather original ideas which deserve attention:—In the report of a committee of the New York Farmers' Club, it is stated that in Salem county, under a very skillful and successful system of agriculture, speaking of peaches, "the first crop (orchard) of trees on new land will produce three or four crops, but a second orchard on the same land, or even in the neighborhood, will frequently not produce a single crop." If the assertion involved in the words we have italicized is truthful—and we do not doubt it—it implies something more than the exhaustion of the peach element in the soil. It shows a radical change in the tree itself. Peaches are now-a-days short-lived on any soil, and utterly refuse to yield on soil that has grown previous crops.

The Rinderpest has proved to be a disease beyond the art of cattle doctors, albeit they have called to their aid the most careful science of the ablest students of pathology and treatment. The reason assigned is that the Rinderpest is not at all a special malady, but an over-ripeness, a grossness of development which is the result of a system of feeding and breeding, directed entirely to the production of fat. The type of a good "beef critter," now, is a beast with bones too small to support its weight, its muscles suffering under what is known in human pathology as "fatty degeneration." Men, in the same condition, have heart-disease, kidney-disease or liver disease, sometimes a triple lesion of all those organs together. With only one, or with all, they die in the most uncompromising manner, and with an infinite variety of symptoms, because, as in Rinderpest, doctors cannot make muscle out of carbon.

In the Herkimer dairies a similar malady is showing itself among the cows. Like fashionable women, they cannot carry their young to the full period of gestation, and a large falling off in the amount and serviceability of the stock is already perceptible. The causes are very evident. A Herkimer dairyman wants seven hundred pounds of cheese a year out of a single cow, that is, just about her entire weight. He gets it, but how? A dark, warm stable, plentiful soiling, and no exercise are the conditions to which the animal is subjected. It is even compelled to submit to the cannibalism of drinking the whey of its own milk, which is "run through again" to be double distilled. Everything goes to milk. The consequences are soft bones, flaccid and degenerated muscles, and impeded respiration. "There is no health in them." A cow needs exercise, out-door air and exposure, and natural foods, just as much as a man, and the very mild, insipid, tasteless stuff that they call Herkimer cheese now-a-days is not cheese at all, but the mere wastage of a sickly cow. The same is true of pork. The hog cholera is only one of nature's very radical plans of reforming evils and punishing violations of sanitary law. As to chickens, they are "blooded," until, like other aristocrats, they neglect their young. He who would raise fancy fowls must get an old-fashioned dung-hill hen to sit the eggs and nurse the brood. In any ordinary lot of Spanish fowls can be found some who are manifestly idiots, others who have no procreative power, and still other highly respectable hidalgos, who some how dry up into leanness, and tumble dead off their perches, like gentlemen with the apoplexy.

We started with fruit, and have only talked of animals. But the causes are the same in both the animal and vegetable world. Fruits are propagated by unnatural methods. The system of grafting, though convenient, is obviously unphilosophical, and must run itself out at last. The apricots, of which there are now only a beggarly few, and those few not worth having—a sort of a cross between a poor peach and and a bad plum. Somebody may have seen a real apricot tree. We never did. There was an apricot tree once, of course. Its scions were grafted on a plum stock, and its offspring again, so on interminably, until the hybridition is complete, and the power of reproduction lost. Peaches and apples are in the same category; always grafted, rarely raised from the seed. In the small fruits, raspberries, blackberries and strawberries, the fashion has been to seek new varieties from seedlings, and it is fair to attribute their increased vigor, beauty and productiveness to the fact that they were born in the natural way, came honestly from the womb of mother earth.

To sum up, we are beginning to believe that there is a limit to improvements on nature, unless we stick closely to the natural processes. Mr. Pettit, of Salem county, raises corn at the rate of 120 bushels an acre, because he has taken infinite pains in the selection of seed to increase the size of the ears. But in that he follows, not violates, physiological law. He gets fine offspring from healthy parents by the divinely ordered process. But we can get no good cattle from parents that are sick with fatty degeneration, and have a strong tendency to dropsy; nor can our supply of fruits be kept up by breeding, in-and-in, and that in a purely artificial method of propagation.—New York Day Book.

An American Rajah in Borneo.

We have before us a copy of a report made by the "Board of Government of the American Trading Company of Borneo," to the stockholders of this company.

It appears that a treaty between this country and the Sultan of Borneo, ratified in 1853, contained this clause;

"Citizens of the United States shall be permitted to purchase, rent, or occupy, or in any other legal way to acquire, all kinds of property within the dominions of his highness, the Sultan of Borneo, and his highness engages that such citizens of the United States of America shall, as far as lies in his power, within his dominions, enjoy full and complete protection and security for themselves and for any property which they may so acquire in future, or which they may have acquired already before the date of the present convention."

In 1865 Mr. Charles Lee Moses was appointed United States consul at Borneo. In a short time he gained so much influence over the sultan as to secure a lease of all northern Borneo at a rental of $4,500 a year. Since 1846 the sultan has been able to get very little revenue from this part of the island. It is, however, in the language of the report, a region "abounding in gold and precious stones, as well as coal, tin, iron, damar, antimony, arsenic, ivory, pearls and bechedemer, camphor, rattans, lignumvitæ, India-rubber and gutta percha."

With this lease in his pocket Mr. Moses went to Hong Kong, and proposed to some American residents at that port to take the lease off his hands. A trading company was formed, and the sum of $2,000 paid to Mr. Moses. A ship was chartered, and the president of the company, Mr. J. T. Torrey, went to Borneo to examine the property.

His first care was to obtain a grant directly from the sultan. After some negotiations he received a patent making him "Rajah of Amboug and Morondu," with the reversion of his authority to his successors in the presidency of the company. The patent was sealed by the sultan and his three chief ministers of state. It is, therefore, binding on all future sultans.

The Ellen then shot out on an exploring expedition. The anchor was first dropped in the Bay of Kimallit. A general council of Malay and Murut chiefs was convened, who gave in their adherence to the new government. The bay is inclosed with valuable forests, and it is said that gold exists in large quantities in the mountains of the interior. In the Benomi river the company have a serviceable water power.

At Asoukan the party found an excellent bay. Here grows a tree closely resembling the lignumvitæ, the wood of which sells in Hong Kong at $2 per cubic foot.

The Abai river was found to be four miles wide, with a depth of four fathoms. Its valley is fertile, and will produce cotton, sugar, coffee, and all kinds of spices. Here several chiefs took the oath of allegiance to the Yankee Rajah.

The board sum up the advantages which they expect will accrue from this grant, as follows: "The monopoly of trade, the working of precious metals and stone, indirect taxation by light import duties, the collection of valuable woods, the sale of the opium monopoly, grants to other companies disposed to work the coal, iron, antimony and tin mines, the sale of the waste lands at low rates to immigrants," etc. It is proposed to form a new organization, with a capital of $500,000, under an act of incorporation to be obtained from Congress.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A Universal Alphabet.—It is not generally known that one and the same telegraphic alphabet is used in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, the German States, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Malta, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Persia, Greece, Turkey, Africa and India; also for the Mediterranean, Persian Gulf and the Atlantic cables. This alphabet was originated by the Germans. The day will come when there will be but one alphabet and one language the world over. Then humanity will not bother learning foreign languages, because there will be no foreign language to learn.—Sacramento Bee.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Bonhomme, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Heart formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 646, Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This Invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the tone of the general market since our previous review, the transactions in nearly every department of business having again been on a moderate scale. The exceptions to the general quiet which has prevailed are restricted to cotton and corn, both of which have been in active request at materially improved prices, and transactions would probably have been still larger but for the comparatively moderate offerings. The business done in sugar and molasses has again been chiefly on the part of jobbers, the transactions in the product of Louisiana being necessarily limited on account of light supplies.

Cotton.—In our last issue we reported the market as having closed on the day previous with a very active demand, and with large sales, indicating an advance of ¼c. Early on Saturday further advices were received from New York and Liverpool showing both markets to be in a very excited condition, with large operations at advancing prices. These accounts contributed not only to increase the demand in our own market, but had the effect also of enhancing prices very materially, buyers having had to pay an advance ranging from ¾ up to 1¼c. per lb. As usual when much excitement prevails, the market was very irregular, and it was next to impossible to obtain strictly reliable quotations. Good Ordinary was generally placed at 24 to 24¾, Low Middling at 25¼ to 25½, and Middling at 26c. The sales reached to about 6,500 bales. On Monday the market opened with a good demand, and with only a moderate supply offering, which enabled factors to obtain, very generally, an improvement on the rates of Saturday.—After the receipt of the regular telegrams, however, giving information of the further advance and great excitement prevailing in the markets of Liverpool and New York, the demand in our own greatly increased, and as fast as lists were placed upon the tables they were taken at enhanced rates, the improvement for the day being generally understood to be from 1 to 2c., making Middling cost from 27 to 27½c., and the sales adding up fully 7,000 bales. Toward the close of business, owing to the very stringent views of holders, many buyers withdrew from the market, and it became a little more quiet as the day advanced, without, however, losing any of its firmness. On Tuesday, notwithstanding that the accounts from New York and Liverpool were again of a very favorable character, both markets continuing not only active, but firm, there was but a moderate business done in our market. The large transactions for the three previous days had, in fact, so much reduced the stock on sale, and more especially that remaining in first hands, as to afford but little scope for buyers. The reported sales for the day only reach to about 4,500 bales, but the market, nevertheless, closed with undiminished firmness. The improvement in Middling, for the past three days, is from 2 to 2½c. per lb.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 18,000 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 8,920 bales, against 9,358 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 438 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 533,952 bales, against 629,294 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 343,110 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 129,149 bales to Great Britain, of 56,114 to France, and of 126,573 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	23 to 24
Good Ordinary	25 to 25½
Low Middling	26 to 26½
Middling	27 to 27½

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE,

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 58 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Colier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable.

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Colier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Colier can cure any case of Cancer.

TEXAS CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN MARCOS, Texas, March 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent communication to the ADVOCATE I promised to say something more of West Texas, etc. Many inquiries are made by my correspondents with regard to the water power of this country. The San Marcos river flows from the mountain of that name. Although the country appears to the casual observer to be level, nevertheless the San Marcos runs with great rapidity. From its source to its junction with the Guadaloupe is by the road from forty-five to fifty miles. This stream is affected but little by the seasons—always flush and rapid. Said a gentleman to me a few days since: "There is a good mill site for every mile, from its source, for twenty miles or more." And certainly the water is as easily controlled as any stream that I have ever seen, the banks being high. There is certainly a fine opening here for those who may wish to invest in machinery. Already Texas has a name in the wool growing world, and perhaps has as many advantages for growing sheep as any country on the globe. This fact is obvious to a casual observer. These vast prairies, covered with the richest of grasses and herbs, afford an abundant supply for sheep. With a temperate climate in winter, they may be kept in fine condition with but little feed. Hence the advantages for manufacturing wool in this country. We have in Western Texas the water power, and may have the wool. The capital will start mills. Lumber is selling at forty dollars per thousand feet. Saw mills are being built rapidly, but yet there is room for more.

I have been asked by correspondents for the population of San Marcos. It is the county site of Hays, and is a small village of only a few hundred souls, but is building up very rapidly, and is destined to be a place of considerable importance at no distant day. At that place I hope the West Texas Conference will locate its Conference school, as it affords many advantages for such an institution. Already there is a high school at that place, under the control of Prof. Hollingsworth and lady. The M. E. Church South has a stronghold at San Marcos in her membership and Sabbath school.

I have been asked if this is a good "horse country." Horses are raised here by the hundred that know not the use of corn or grain of any kind. True, some die during the winter, but comparatively few. I will here say, for the benefit of some of my brethren and friends, both in Mississippi and Alabama, who wish to invest in stock in this country, to notice the advertisement in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of the sale of stock on the first of June, in Hays city, Texas, by Mr. Caldwell, trustee. There are two hundred head in the cavalada, or in English, cava yard. The ranch will also be sold, with or without stock. This is a good chance for such as may wish to grow stock.

I promised to say something of the West Texas Conference. Some of my brethren of the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences have been corresponding with me in view of a transfer to this Conference. To such I will say again, this is a vast, broad, rich country, and will doubtless become a very convenient one at no distant day. But you must make up your minds to bear labor and fatigue more than in the older conferences. But nevertheless, should you wish to improve a little home in view of declining years, you may get the land unimproved and very cheap. The West Texas Conference covers a vast territory, from the Colorado on the east to the Rio Grande on the west, and from latitude 29½ north to the Gulf on the south. The membership of the West Texas Conference is about what the Alabama Conference was in 1836, composed mainly of comparatively young men.

The Texas Conferences need a bishop to live somewhere in Texas. They will doubtless ask for such an arrangement, and of course, if the request is granted, will see that he is well provided for. Could we not induce Bishop McTyeire to settle in Texas? Now in the prime of life, with an unprecedented popularity in Texas, he has won the hearts of all, both in the chair and pulpit. He is certainly the "right man in the right place." He admires greatly the beautiful San Marcos country, and calls it the Arcadia of Texas. I met him at the head of the San Marcos, where I live, a few days before the meeting of the West Texas Conference. He is the same cordial Christian gentleman, as well as bishop. Very affectionately,

J. W. BROWN.

PENCIL, BRUSH AND BROOM.

The first autumnal chill is very slight. It only tones up the atmosphere a little, stiffens the musquitoes, dries up the perspiration, and brings floods of sweet, restoring sleep to the exhausted human world. The opening fall is indeed a sort of rest of nature—a stopping, as if for refreshment, after the sweltering labors and endurances of summer. The vegetable world, like the animal, has been panting under the burdens of its life. It has been producing not only fruit, but foliage, and now the fresh breath of the season gives at once the sweetness and beauty of ripeness to both apple and leaf. It sheds russet, and gold, and crimson on the fruit, and all the hues of earth upon the foliage. Its beginning is not with the oft-lamented "sere and yellow leaf," but with delicate and skillful touches, as of the finest pencil, dipped in vials of empyrean tints. You go out into the morning air, just beginning to grow crisp, and pass round to the north side of a maple, until last night quite green all over, and there are the traces, faint but beautiful, of the pencil of autumn. A hundred leaves have been touched; the coming glory is already shadowed forth. A dim outline of what is to be has been drawn, as if in colors of air—a sort of dream written upon the very fuzz of the most favored leaves.

A morning or two after, in a stiffer air, you see from an eminence a hundred trees, revealing in like manner the hues of promise. The northern breeze has pencilled gum, hickory, dogwood and cherry, setting pictures of brilliant red and gold, and purple in frames of emerald; or, rather, changing the figure, it has made the tree like an apple, with a single touch of beautiful ripeness on its cheek. While these favorite trees of the season are changing their strength for maturity and loveliness the great body of the forest still retains its vesture of sturdy verdure, and these ripe spots remind one of the tiny nautilus, scattered over the monotonous sea, spreading its many-hued sail to the light and the breezes of heaven.

There are certain flowers, too, that live far into the autumn. The dahlia is just in its proudest bloom when the trees begin to grow mellow. When this flower is compared with the flowers of spring and summer, it reminds one of mechanical skill, and looks a little as though some dainty and curious hand had cut it out of a turnip and appropriately colored it. A closer look reminds you of quills neatly cut, and nicely bound up, so as to represent a flower. But with study, this hard flower grows upon you, and the quills, if quills they must be, seem to have come from birds of Paradise, trimmed and bound together by fairy hands. In this flower, flourishing amid the decay of the year, we see the superiority of nature even where she becomes a mere artisan.

To the pencil of autumn succeeds the brush. Her spirit deepens, her work multiplies. She no longer dips into vials, but into lakes of molten gold, into seas of purple and crimson. The whole forest glows as with fire—the flame, indeed, being of different degrees of intensity. Scarce a spot is exempt from the conflagration of beauty. Only here and there it is stayed by a line or thicket of evergreens, or relieved by a living cluster of wild flowers in some sequestered nook, or by some tree surrounded by pines or cedars, or screened from the frost by a wall. This is not the dying of the vegetable wealth of the year: it is only ripeness, which, alas! must ever be followed by decay and death. But shall we sorrow over the glory of maturity because it is the road to death? Is not death itself to be followed by another and less mortal maturity?

After the brush comes the broom,

"When chill November's surly blasts
Make field and forest bare."

The work of pencil and brush has struck in; the smooth and polished gold and crimson begin to shrink, and shrivel, and dry, and harden. Death has trodden on the heels of beautiful maturity. The work is done. The canvas must come down and be torn into shreds. Only the stripped frame remains. The bereft trees stretch up toward heaven imploringly their manifold arms, and seem to wave them in sorrowful suppliance. They seem to murmur as the bleak winds sway them to and fro: "The cold, cold winter is at the door. O thou who hast stripped us, wherewithal shall we be clothed? When the snow is piled about our roots, when the sleet hangs hard and heavy upon our frozen branches, when the very sap hides itself in the earth, how shall we live?" The beauty is now gone; its offcast robes in leafy shreds rattle along the dry ground, the sport of the storm. And often, as the dry leaves sing past us, we keenly feel how shallow is mere external beauty. But as pictures live and are famous in history even after they have perished, so autumn is a picture in the soul forever, even as its place is fixed in the circle of the year. So, too, with human beauty: when it is dead, it still lives; it expresses the soul; its colors and shades were thoughts, feelings, character, and shall live forever in the memory and the affections. Thus none of the beauty is lost; it flies before the broom, but still remains in the soul. The frames are only swept for new pictures, and the old are safe.—New York Methodist.

THE statistics of intoxicating liquors in New York city were given a few days since, as follows, by Rev. Van Meter, superintendent of the Howard Mission. We copy from an exchange:

"There are in this city 5,203 licensed places selling intoxicating liquor. Superintendent Kennedy placed policemen at 223 of them for 24 consecutive hours; and this is the result: Each rum-hole receives a daily average of 134 visits, making an aggregate of 697,202 per day, 4,183,212 per week, or 218,224,226 visits in one year! Each visit averages at least 15 minutes. This gives us 5,455,605 days of ten hours each, or 1,848 years. At present wages, each one, if sober and industrious, would earn $1 per day—$5,455,605 in one year. But this is not all the lost time. The time of at least three persons is occupied by each grog shop to do its work. This gives us 15,609 persons—enough to make a large city. At $1 per day for each we have (not including Sunday) $4,870,008, or an aggregate of $10,325,603 of wasted time by seller and drinker—a sum sufficient to carry on all the Sunday-school, Missionary, Tract and Bible Societies in the land. But this is a mere fraction of the cost of rum. From the same source we have the following; each rum-hole receives a daily average of $141 53, making an aggregate of $736,280 59 per week, or $38,286,590 68 per annum, to which add the value of lost time, and we have $48,612,193 68. But the real cost cannot be estimated. Look at the thousands of shivering, hungry, helpless, hopeless little victims. What sum would compensate for loss of character, domestic happiness, ruined husbands, wives, sons and daughters? for the absence of every ray of light and hope in this and in the world to come? Still, were this confined to our Sodom, it would be comparatively a small matter. But the nation is deluged with rum. The rumseller drags down to deepest infamy and woe many of our most eminent statesmen and bravest generals, our most distinguished judges, lawyers, ministers, artists, and profound scholars. The destroyer lurks around our dwellings, watching for us, and those dearer than life to us. The power to put an end to this rests with ministers and the members of their churches. It is for them to say whether the destroyer shall be crushed or not. God and humanity holds them responsible."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

LONDON, April 4.—Disraeli moved an adjournment of the House to the 20th, if the Liberals should carry the Irish church question. Adopted.

Divisions then occurred on Stanley's motion to postpone the church question to next session. Six hundred members voted, and the government was defeated by 60 majority.

Gladstone's resolutions were then adopted by 56 majority.

The Prince and Princess of Wales remained in the royal gallery during the debate, which was not concluded until three o'clock this evening.

The defeat of the ministry forms the chief topic of conversation, and all the journals contain articles upon the subject.

The Times says: "The House of Commons has resolved that this cancer of the empire shall be removed. This morning's vote is the dawn of a reunited empire. The wrongs of ages are to be ended and right done amid the acclamation of the nation. This must guarantee peace."

LONDON, April 4.—The Morning Herald concludes a very able article saying: "This vote is the death warrant of the Irish church. No finer trophy has been won by the Liberal party since the emancipation of 1829."

The Standard says: "The effect of this vote will be to waste the session without advancing the object proposed one single step."

LONDON, April 8.—A letter was received here to-day from Dr. Livingstone, via Zanzibar. He was in good health, and returns to England after a successful journey.

The Irish hierarchy are preparing a petition to the Queen against any changes in the Irish church.

BERLIN, April 4.—A resolution that members of Parliament should not be held responsible for words uttered in debate, passed by a large majority.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—In answer to the charge in the impeachment articles, that the President violated law and custom in removing Stanton during the session of the Senate, it will, beside other proof, be shown that Judge Holt, now an uncompromising impeacher, was appointed Postmaster General by Buchanan during the session of the Senate, and that his nomination was not sent to the Senate, notwithstanding he continued to act as Postmaster General.

Buchanan, in response to the inquiry of the Senate on the subject, cited 159 cases of removals by former Presidents during the session of the Senate. Holt himself, while Postmaster General, removed three postmasters during the session of the Senate, viz: in June, 1860, the postmasters in New Orleans and New York city; and in January, 1861, the postmaster at Milwaukie. Neither Buchanan nor Holt was impeached.

Now that the impeachment managers have concluded their testimony, and the whole case of the prosecution is before the Senate, wonder is expressed by liberal Republicans that such a flimsy case has been made out, and they are disgusted with the proceeding. Even the extreme Radicals are disappointed, and to-night many of them admit that the Senate must acquit Mr. Johnson beyond peradventure.

The impeachers are alarmed lest certain Radical Senators whom they have heretofore doubted shall insist upon disposing of the case conscientiously upon law and the facts, and refuse to convict in response to the behests of Radical party leaders.

The defence, when developed, will be overwhelming, and make a case for the President so strong that the impenchers and their articles will stink in the nostrils of all true men.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—Judge Curtis opens to-morrow for the defence in the impeachment case. There is greater demand for tickets than since impeachment opened.

ELECTION RETURNS.

CINCINNATI, April 7.—The Democrats elected City Commissioner and Wharfmaster. The Republican majority last year was 2,100.

EVANSVILLE, IND., April 7.—The Democrats have carried the town for the first time in several years.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Returns from Connecticut, except thirteen towns, give English 1,294 majority. The Legislature is Radical.

The new constitution of Michigan is defeated. The negro suffrage clause killed it.

Seventy towns, including Detroit, give 8,100 majority against it.

Sandusky, Ohio, has elected the entire Democratic ticket by 200 majority.

The Democrats have carried Keokuk, Iowa, which went Republican last year.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 7.—The Republicans elect 19 of 30 Councilmen.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 7.—Democratic majority 1,500. The Republicans increase their majority on joint ballot, securing a Radical Senator.

HINTS TO VOTERS

The fact of having been a member of the City Council does not exclude from registration, according to Special Orders No. 57, current series, headquarters Fifth Military District.

An officer of the militia is not an executive or judicial officer.

Persons who were non-commissioned officers in the United States army prior to the year 1861 are not disfranchised because they engaged in the late war on the Confederate side.

The fact of having been a member of a secession convention, and of signing a secession ordinance, does not disqualify from registration.

The simple belief that a person is disloyal does not disqualify him from registration. If he will take the prescribed oath of registration he can register.

No one is disfranchised, for any reason whatever, unless he actively engaged in the war on the Confederate side. Mere political opinion has no effect, one way or the other.—N. O. Crescent.

CONNECTICUT.

The result of the election in Connecticut shows that there is no ebb in the tide of public opinion which has been setting so strongly against the Republican party for the last year. Connecticut was the first State to show the influence of the great Democratic reaction against Radical tyranny; and Connecticut now puts the climax to a series of political victories unequaled in the history of the country, when we consider the circumstances under which they have been won. From a position of almost hopeless numerical inferiority, in 1866, the Democratic party has become dominant throughout the North. In 1866 the only States carried by the Democracy were Delaware, Maryland and Kentucky. Every one of the original so-called free States was under Radical control. Every Northern governor and every Northern legislature were elected by the Republican party.

* * * * * * * *

The election of 1867, in Connecticut, was the first intimation that they had miscalculated the temper and exceeded the wishes of the people on whose support they relied. It was the first symptom of a rebellion against Radical tyranny, which soon became general throughout the North. It was the first pronunciamento of the people against the Republican party. From that time, up to the present, the reaction has been gaining strength. Successively California, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York pronounced by popular majorities against the policy of the Radicals, whilst in Ohio, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Maine, and even Massachusetts, their power was exposed to the severe shocks of an excited public opinion. And now Connecticut repeats the vote of last year in still more emphatic tones. The result may be regarded as settling the status of Connecticut in the Presidential election, and, what is still more important, as demonstrating that the Democratic party of 1868 is even more powerful than the Democratic party of 1867. That is to say, taken in connection with elections of the last twelve months, it shows that the Democracy are strong enough in the North to elect their candidate for the Presidency next November.—N. O. Crescent.

THE REGISTRATION.

The revision of the registry lists was finished yesterday. At the moment of writing the totals have not been received from the various wards, but from the figures already received it is safe to calculate that between five and six thousand have been added to the lists. Of these probably more than two to one are whites, thus making the white majority on the city registration nearly three thousand. This is not quite as well as we expected. The white registered voters of New Orleans now amount to about 20,000. If we deduct from these an insignificant number of carpet-baggers, renegades, and vagrant and mendicant "loilists," there will remain enough to carry our whole city ticket. There is no room to doubt that almost the whole of the white registered vote will be cast at the coming elections.

Our people are thoroughly aroused by the danger which menaces them at home, and encouraged to active exertion by the cheering successes of their friends in other parts of the country.

* * * * * * * *

Now that registration is at an end, it is to be hoped that a vigorous and energetic canvass will at once be inaugurated. The work is only half done as yet. Registration is a necessary preliminary, but voting is an equally necessary sequence. Every vote is of importance in this contest. We cannot spare one. We must make sure work this time, and we can make sure work only by earnest, energetic, unremitting exertion.—N. O. Crescent.

INTELLECTUAL CONGREGATIONS.

There is a great deal of nonsense current in regard to the wants of "intellectual" congregations. What do such people come to church for, after the brain-tasking work and worry of the week? Do they come for a new tasking of the brain, or a hard grapple with metaphysics, or for a brilliant oratorical display, or an inundation of scholastic erudition? No; they come to be fed and quickened and comforted and spiritualized; they come to be told their duty; they come to be made better; they come to be made ready to live holy lives and to die happy deaths. They come to worship their God, and not to be worried about oppositions of science, falsely so called, and about questions which minister to no profit.

I have generally found that the most intellectual auditors prefer to hear a simple, scriptural and spiritual preaching. The late Judge McLean, of the U. S. Supreme Court, (a good Methodist too,) once said to me—"I was glad to hear you give that solemn personal incident in your discourse last night; ministers now-a-days are getting above telling a story in a sermon; but I like it." During my first settlement I was called to preach before one of the most eminent lawyers in America. At first I was terribly afraid of that big head in the front pew. But one day the great lawyer said to me, "My young friend! the two things I especially like in preaching are simplicity and earnestness. If one of my law students was not more in earnest to win a $5 suit in a justice's court than many preachers are in warning a sinner to flee from hell, I would kick that student out of my office!" After that I paid no attention to the profound lawyer in the front pew, but aimed my preaching at his coachman, who sat back by the door. If I could keep the coachman awake I felt sure of the lawyer. Since that time I try to stick to the three Ss—simplicity, scripturality, spirituality. Let not my good Brother Bulkley be alarmed to find those same Ss in a Fifth avenue pulpit.

GOLDEN CONSELS.

I close with quoting a half dozen golden counsels from the late Dr. J. W. Alexander, who once preached in the pulpit which Dr. John Hall now occupies. "Avoid abstractions in your sermons. Intersperse anecdotes. Don't be afraid to say simple things; consider Daniel Webster; the greatest sayings are simple. The Bible is the one book of the preacher; study that! Preach in a glow, and let the thoughts gush. The reason we have so little powerful preaching is that we have so little piety. God's word is the best corrective of error; preach the word." If the accomplished and devout Alexander ever revisits, in spirit, his beloved pulpit, he must rejoice to find there—not a prodigy—but a plain, powerful preacher of the faithful saying, Christ Jesus died to save sinners.—Theodore Cuyler.

ROME.—The six newly appointed cardinals on Tuesday took the customary oaths and received their hats and the other insignia of office. Cardinal Bonaparte has received the title of Saint Pudentina.

The health of the pope is again occasioning considerable anxiety in Rome. It is said that his holiness has lately had several epileptic fits, to which he was subject in his youth, but from which he had not suffered for many years, and that some of these occasioned quite a panic at the Vatican. These attacks are thought to have resulted from the excitement and fatigue consequent upon giving audiences and attending ceremonies, in which the pope has persisted, notwithstanding the warnings and entreaties of his friends.

THE lake of Neusiedl, in Hungary, on the confines of Austria, is now completely drained and dried, and the land so obtained is about to be placed under cultivation. It contains eight square miles of virgin soil, and the belief is that it will prove extremely fertile.

THE GOLDEN SIDE.

BY MRS. M. A. KIDDER.

There is many a rest in the road of life,
If we only would stop to take it;
And many a tone from the better land,
If the querulous heart would make it!
To the sunny soul, that is full of hope,
And whose beautiful trust ne'er faileth,
The grass is green and the flowers are bright,
Though the wintry storm prevaileth.

Better to hope, though the clouds hang low,
And to keep the eye still lifted;
For the sweet blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted!
There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayers to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

Better to weave in the web of life
A bright and golden filling,
And to do God's will with a ready heart,
And hands that are swift and willing,
Than to snap the delicate minute threads
Of our curious lives asunder;
And then blame heaven for the tangled ends,
And sit and grieve and wonder.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A member of the Mississippi Conference, writing from Fayette, Mississippi, March 25th, says:

"Very little money can be had here, however, for anything. My support has consisted, thus far, in a scant supply of food alone. It requires much faith to be cheerfully at work. Each day we must commit ourselves into the hands of God, and trust him for our daily supplies. He has favored us now with two days' supply ahead. We have abundant reason to be thankful and to bless his holy name. He has been with us and blessed our souls with the richness of his love in our humble little home, and has kept us from severe bodily suffering. W. F. G."

The Relation of Baptized Children to the Church.

MR. EDITOR: It is not for the purpose of entering into controversy upon this subject that I present it to yours readers, but if possible to awaken greater interest among our preachers and people in regard to it; neither do I profess to have anything new to offer. I simply write to call attention to a subject that I fear is too much neglected by us. If I understand the teachings of our church, we hold that the baptized children of our church members are actual members of the church. I am sustained in this view by our book of Discipline and standard authorities. The whole theory of infant baptism proceeds upon the supposition that the children of believers are to be recognized as members of the visible church of Christ. In our controversies with the opposers of infant baptism we argue the identity of the church under the Jewish and Christian dispensations—that children were brought into the Jewish church by the rite of circumcision, and that baptism has come in the room of circumcision, and therefore children should be brought into the Christian church by the rite of baptism.

Mr. Wesley says:—"Infants, therefore, are capable of being admitted into the church, and have a right thereto, (Doctrinal Tracts, p. 225.) The children of the Jews were visible members of the Jewish church under the covenant of Abraham, and as such they were received into it by circumcision, the door of entrance; the children of Christians were never cut off from this privilege when their fathers were received into the church, whether they were Jews or Gentiles, and therefore they are members of the Christian church, also under spiritual promises and blessings," (Ibid., p. 226.)

Mr. Watson says: "Infant children are declared by Christ to be members of his church," (Inst., p. 715.)

Dr. Summers says: "The membership of children in the Christian church is formally recognized in the New Testament," (Summers on Baptism, p. 27.)

Other authorities might be quoted, but these are sufficient to show that our church recognizes baptized children as members of the visible church of Christ. If baptized children are actual members of the church, should they not be formally recognized as such? Instead of this we too often practically ignore their church membership. In many of our charges there is not even a record kept of their baptism. We baptize them and in our public teachings recognize their church membership, but in our practice we fail to treat them as such. Although the church, as provided for in the book of Discipline, contemplates that a registry shall be kept of all the children that are baptized by the pastor, yet in many of our circuits and stations no such registry is to be found. The preacher simply baptizes the child, and no further notice is taken of the fact, unless, perhaps, the parents make a record of the transaction; and in those few places where a registry is made of the baptisms, there is no roll kept of the infant church membership, as in the case of adult members. There should be a registry kept, not only of the baptisms of infants, but also a regular list of all the baptized children within the bounds of the pastoral charge, as is done in the case of adult members; and these children should be taught that they are actual members of the church, and they will be expected to conduct themselves as such. Our book of Discipline requires that at each quarterly meeting the question should be asked: "Is there a written report, * * * of the pastoral instruction of children?" If this was rigidly enforced it would be the duty of the pastor to impress upon the minds of the children the importance of the relation which they sustain to the church; that, having been baptized with water, they should seek for the baptism of the Holy Spirit; that, being members of the visible body of Christ, they should seek to be incorporated into his spiritual fold by the regenerating influence of the spirit of God. While papist and high churchmen place an undue stress upon the outward rite of baptism, teaching that it is regeneration, we often attach too little importance to the privileges and blessings which it is designed to confer. Instead of filling the church with mere formalist and unconverted members of the church, as some seem to fear, I believe that the plan briefly marked out would greatly increase the number of truly regenerated spiritual professors of religion. I believe that, as ministers, we often waste a great deal of time in trying to win old hardened sinners to Christ that might be much more profitably employed in laboring for the salvation of the children of the church. Let every minister devote more time and labor to the children of the church, feeding not only the sheep, but also the lambs of the fold, and instead of seeing so many of the children of Christian parents wandering away from Christ and the church, we would see not merely a few, but the vast majority of the children of the church giving evidence of a sound conversion, thereby rejoicing the hearts of pastors and parents. In accordance with the views already expressed, I have determined to adopt the plan of enrolling in a book, kept for the purpose, not only the names of the children whom I baptize, but also the names of all the baptized children of church members within the bounds of my pastoral charge, and then endeavor to impress upon their minds the importance of the relation they sustain to the church. If any others, better instructed in the things of God, can point out a "more excellent way," I will gladly embrace it. H.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NUMBER IX.—PROPHECIES RELATING TO CHRIST.

The coming and advent of so illustrious a person as the Messiah, upon a mission so sublime, benevolent and vast, certainly should have been announced, and announced in such terms that the world might recognize his claims. The prophecies relating to Christ extend from Eden to the triumphant ascension from the Mount of Olives. "As a majestic river," says Sir William Jones, "expands itself more and more the farther it removes from its source, so prophecy, issuing from the first promise in Paradise as its fountain head, acquired additional strength and fullness as it rolled down successive ages, and will still go on increasing in extent and grandeur until it shall finally lose itself in the ocean of eternity."

It should be borne in mind that these predictions relating to Christ are as ancient and as authentic as they claim to be. They are found in the Old Testament scriptures as the Jews now have them. As the Jews reject Christ, they cannot be accused of doing anything to promote the claim of the Christians that Christ is the Messiah foretold in these Scriptures. The prophecies relating to Christ embrace more than one hundred particulars, all of which received a complete fulfillment. Of course we cannot, in a newspaper article, enter into all these details. We can but touch upon a few—enough however, we think, to prove that Christ was foretold, and that he realized these prophecies, and establishes his claim to be the predicted Saviour of the world.

It was predicted, nearly two thousand years before his advent, that he was to be a descendant of Abraham, an Israelite. That he was has never been denied. Some 1,687 years before the advent Jacob, on his dying bed, predicted that Christ should be of the tribe of Judah, thus out of the twelve tribes narrowing down the prediction to one. About seven hundred years before the coming of Christ it was predicted that he should be descended from the family of Jesse, of the tribe of Judah, thus still more narrowing down the prediction. Then it was announced he would be, according to the flesh, the offspring of David, the son of Jesse. The Jews, from the days of Moses, kept genealogical tables till some little while after the birth of Christ. From these tables Christ is proved to be of the tribe of Judah, of the family of David. By referring to the gospel by Matthew it will be seen that he proves that Joseph was descended from David. This was the legal genealogy of Mary and Jesus. By referring to St. Luke it will be seen that he gives the natural descent of Mary as the daughter of the family of David; so that according to the flesh, the humanity of Christ was descended from David. The genealogical tables were carefully preserved. Josephus tells us in his history from what family he was descended. Upon the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans these tables were all destroyed, so that without the intervention of a miracle it would now be impossible for any Jew to tell from what family he is descended.

The time when the Messiah was to be born and appear among men was predicted in several ways. First. Daniel predicts that from the edict of the king of Persia to restore and rebuild Jerusalem and the temple (which had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar) to the coming of the Messiah would be four hundred and ninety years. It is matter of history that Christ came at this time. Second. He was to come while the kingdom of Judah, with its civil and ecclesiastical polity, continued. So he did. But shortly after this the sceptre departed from Judah. Archelaus, the son of Herod the Great, was the last king of the Jews. He was dethroned and banished by Augustus Cæsar in the twelfth year of Christ's age—the same year in which he publicly appeared in the temple. Since then the Jews have had no "sceptre" nor "lawgiver." During the period of Christ's public ministry Judea was a Roman province, and the Jews had no power to put any one to death by their laws independent of the will of the Roman governor. Third. The prophet Haggai, some five hundred and twenty years before Christ, predicted that Christ should come while the second temple stood, and by his appearance in it, make it more glorious than the majestic structure built by Solomon the Great. Jesus did come while this second temple stood—appeared in it, and preached in its courts his glorious gospel. Soon after the ascension of Christ the Romans utterly destroyed this temple, and for eighteen hundred years the Jews have never had a temple. These various prophecies fix the time of the Messiah's advent.

The place where he was to be born was predicted by the prophet Micah, seven hundred and ten years before his birth—Bethlehem, and in Bethlehem he was born. A decree of Tiberius Cæsar caused Joseph and Mary to repair to Bethlehem to be taxed. History tells us this decree was issued by the emperor, and just at the period of the Saviour's birth.

Christ was to like Moses—Moses so predicted some 1,450 years before the advent. Let us trace some of these resemblances. Moses was born at a time when a royal decree had gone forth commanding the male children to be put to death. Christ was born during the existence of a similar decree. Moses was compelled to fly from the land of his birth. So Christ's parents took the young child and fled with him into Egypt, until those were dead who sought his life. Moses fasted forty days—so did Christ also. Moses, as the agent and messenger of Jehovah, wrought many miracles. Christ wrought multitudes of miracles, subjecting all elements to his will. Moses was a prophet. So was Christ, foretelling many distant and important events. Moses under God was a great lawgiver and the founder of a civil and ecclesiastical polity. So Christ was a lawgiver and the founder of the gospel kingdom, which is indeed but the expansion and complement of the church of Israel. Moses under God was the leader of Israel. Christ is the leader of all the Israel of God. Now we submit that here are a great variety of circumstances that were utterly beyond the power of any impostor to control—for example, the family from which he should be descended, the time of his birth, the place of his birth, his being taken into Egypt while a child, the decree of Herod putting young children to death, the overthrow of the Jewish government—these were matters which it was simply impossible for an impostor to arrange and control.

It was predicted that Christ should work miracles, and so he did; that he should be poor and despised, and so he was; that he should be sold for thirty pieces of silver, and so he was.

Many particulars were predicted in relation to Christ's trial, insults, crucifixion, as the casting lots for his vesture, giving him vinegar to drink, his bones not broken, his side pierced, his death with the wicked, and his burial with the rich. So also his resurrection and his ascension were predicted. All these predictions were literally fulfilled, as every reader of the inspired biographies well knows. There is no solution of these wonderful prophecies, and their equally wonderful fulfillment, but the hypothesis that the prophets spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and that Jesus was the promised Messiah—God manifested in the flesh, seen of angels, preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, and received up into glory. W.

POPULAR as the late Mr. Hawthorne's works are in this country, they are, perhaps, still more popular in France. Besides appearing in the Moniteur, Le Siecle, and one, if not more magazines, there are no less than three different translations of some of them.

SCRAPS FROM MY DIARY.

BY REV. J. A. PAULY, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

It is now nineteen years that I have been working in the Lord's vineyard. How strange were the vicissitudes through which, during that time, I have passed. Hewn out of the quarry of the world, I did not have the polish so necessary to insure ministerial success. Like Amos and Elisha, I had previously followed rural avocations. But with all that, the Lord has so far abundantly blessed my faint endeavors to promote his cause.

In my ministerial career I had not only made it my business on Sundays, snugly rigged and trimmed after the manner of too many, to preach to genteel audiences, but also day by day to visit the highways and hedges, seeking for the lost sheep of the house of Israel. So it happened that on one day I came across a wild and reckless prodigal, a bar-keeper in Gretna. I entered his tavern, not to drink the poisonous liquid, but to exhort that youthful bar-keeper by all means "to flee from the wrath to come." Just then there entered some regular customers. One proposed to "treat the whole house." I, of course, was invited to participate. Refusing, I was saved from a good old-fashioned Dutch thrashing only through the interference of the bar-keeper. Strange as it may seem, this incident created a lasting friendship between us. Had he not delivered me from the giant fists of my countrymen? Why should I not try to deliver him from hell-fire? I soon learned his entire history.—Said he: "I was born A. D. 1833, in Gingermunster, in Bavaria. Because of exceeding political oppression, when I was thirteen years old father determined, with the entire family, to emigrate to America, the asylum of the down-troddeu. But alas! the very same year father died here of yellow fever. What shall I do now? I followed anything and everything in order to make money. Being twenty-six years old, and having had some experience in bar-keeping, I took to myself a wife, only sixteen years old, bought this property, and set up a bar—a fine money-making concern."

His wife now entered, and Mr. Links—the name of my friend—made me acquainted with her. She was a fine-looking lady. At the prospect of becoming a Methodist she was not at all pleased. "We are Catholics," she said. "Father Schaeffer is our kind and indulgent confessor. He never troubles us about visiting balls and theatres, and allows us to sell dram to our heart's content. We pay him well, and he means well with us. No, no, Mr. Pauly, we shall not turn Methodists. Closing our shop would compel us to go begging." After having cordially invited them once to attend our divine worship, and having devoutly prayed with them, I took my leave. They did attend my preaching at one time, but there after studiously endeavored to avoid me.

Time passed on. One fine evening Mr. Links entered my office, pale and trembling. I wondered what had happened, when he informed me that on the previous night his wife had seen a ghost. A woman who had died several years previous had appeared to her after ten o'clock at night, in the yard adjoining her house. "Well," answered I, "to-night, with some friends, I will accompany your wife, at the same time, to the same spot, and if the ghost again appears, please let me know." Sure enough, on the following day Mr. Links again appeared. "We had fortified ourselves with drams of whisky, stepped out to the haunted place fully courageous, when all at once my wife screamed out: 'there she is,' and then fainted. Comrades and myself saw nothing."

I then accompanied him to his residence in Algiers. After nightfall I prayed with the family, and then walked out alone to the stated place, determined, if ghosts there were, ghosts I would see. Alone I mused and prayed. The clock struck eleven, but no ghost appeared. It struck twelve. There, there, behold the ghost! I see him distinctly. My eye is fixed on him, his eye on me. I tremble. What shall I do? Shall I run, scream, or pray? I prayed and then walked right up to my strange visitor. "Speak," said I; "who art thou?" But the ghost spoke not. Aye, thought I, whatever it be, I shall try to lay my hand on it. I made one sudden bound upon it, grasped it, and held—what think you, dear reader, it was?—held a newly whitewashed fence-picket, which had been lately put there in place of an old rotten one!

I returned to the house, finding the inmates alternately buoying up their spirits from a bottle of rum and an old prayer book. They seemed surprised at my courage. Informing them of the result of my exploits, I preached them, in that solemn hour of midnight, a sermon on 1st Cor., 2: 2. I enjoined unusual liberty during preaching.—The audience seemed deeply affected, and the result was that Mr. and Mrs. Links joined the church.

Joining the church produced the happiest results. The coffee house was sold. They moved away from the circle of former associates, for fear of being drawn back into the world. They both became the most zealous church members I ever had. Never could inclemency of weather keep them from attending church. Having settled in Jefferson City, Brother Links became a butcher, but never would he sell meat on Sunday, though thereby he lost many customers.

So things progressed favorably. On the 19th of July, 1867, Brother Links became impressed with the necessity of a deeper work of grace in his own heart. Like Jacob, he wrestled with the Lord all night, and, happily, on the following day he could rejoice, exclaiming: "I know that my Redeemer liveth."—He was the happiest convert I ever saw.

But, alas! a day afterward he was seized with cholera, suffered unheard-of agonies, and five days afterward, July 24th, was a corpse. He had attained to the age of 33 years, 10 months and 15 days. He left an affectionate young wife and three children to weep over his sudden and unfortunate loss. May the Lord bless them!—Arranged and translated from the German by J. B. A. A.

Cure for the Dropsy.

The following article came to our hand from a most respectable source, and we strongly recommend it to the attention of our readers.—Salem Gazette.

Extract from a letter written by a very intelligent and respectable man, dated in Maine, April 5, 1838:

"I am knowing to two extremely distressing cases of dropsy being suddenly relieved by the means of the bark of common elder. One, a woman advanced in years, in the last stage of the disease, who lost a brother a short time previous by the same disease. The other a young woman who had been confined to her bed for nearly twelve months, (four of which, previous to January last, she was unable to lie down, and whose strength was almost exhausted,) is now wholly free from dropsy and recovering strength in a manner surprising and unexpected. Other cases less aggravated have been cured by the same. The recipe is—Take two handfuls of the green or inner bark of the white common elder, steep it in two quarts of white Lisbon wine twenty-four hours, take a gill of the wine in the morning, fasting, or more if it can be borne; or if more convenient, in the morning or part about noon, on an empty stomach. The effect of the bark prepared as above, or the pressed juice from the leaves (full grown,) which had been used with success when wine could not be procured, is, that it promotes all the animal secretions necessary to health, which is the cause of its salutary effect in dropsy. Great debility will always follow the use of powerful evacuants, and the best medical writers now recommend nutritious aliment as the best medicine in every, even in extreme cases of debility. The bark and leaves of the elder have been long known as powerful evacuants, and not esteemed unsafe. Yet caution is recommended in using the buds, as their effect is esteemed and has been found dangerous in some cases."

LETTER FROM ALABAMA.

CAMDEN, Ala., March 20, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I trespass upon pressing engagements to give you a brief notice of a few passing events in our midst. I have just finished my first round on my district for the year. We have had some good meetings, and some of the circuits are reported in a good state; but then there is great neglect of the means of grace, and a spiritual lethargy truly appalling. Financially there is a "masterly inactivity," a terrible "letting alone" of the preachers. I have talked about money and preached about money till I have grown tired of the theme myself, and have dropped the subject. Since I have ceased goading the people to pay quarterage, they are lagging worse and worse. What shall I do? The work of a presiding elder is difficult, perplexing and wearing. It takes great grace to sustain one in it. Though it is a Christian duty to "covet earnestly the best gifts," no one need envy a presiding elder.

But the newest thing in my district is the doings of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, of which I will give you a brief history.

The Rev. Wm. P. Miller was received into the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, at Talladega, Alabama, in October last, and was appointed by Bishop Clark presiding elder over that portion of Alabama embraced in Wilcox, Monroe, Baldwin, Conecuh, Butler, Covington, Coffee, Crenshaw, Dale and Henry counties, and all of West Florida. He then went to work officially and publicly—he had been at work before clandestinely—and organized several societies on the Evergreen circuit, in Conecuh county. For the information of his Northern brethren who are far away from him, I would say he is at work proselyting the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as far as he can, to the "mother church," and participating in the politics of his section. So far as I can learn he does not try to induce any one to join his loyal church but the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In the late election in Alabama he was a candidate on the Radical ticket, and canvassed his immediate section. Though it is not generally known, he is somewhat of a political stager—he stumped the section where he was in 1861 in defence and in furtherance of the cause of secession. I will refer to this again before I am through.

Wm. P. Miller was received on trial in the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in January, 1850. He was from that time a member of that Conference until it was divided into the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences, when he fell into the Montgomery Conference, of which he remained a member until he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church North, as above stated. In May, 1866, Bishop Robert Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, appointed him to the Evergreen circuit, in the Camden district. Bishop Wightman returned him there for 1867. From this it is seen that for two years, and up to the time that he joined the Northern Methodists, he was on the Evergreen circuit, acting as preacher and pastor in the Church South. The point I wish to show to the public in this statement is that all the time he was on this circuit professing to serve, and apparently serving our church and people, he was laying his plans and perfecting his schemes to join the Northern Methodists, and carry with him our members. He was availing himself of the influence and the access, which his position on that circuit gave him, to proselyte our members and get possession of our church deeds and houses of worship. His own brother-in-law, of whom he made a confident, and who, by the way, has not gone with him, says he went to work in this matter immediately after he was appointed to the circuit by Bishop Paine. He then told his brother-in-law that he was going to join the Northern Church.

A second point. On the 19th of October, 1867, I held the fourth Quarterly Conference for Evergreen circuit. Rev. W. P. Miller was there as preacher in charge of the circuit, and in that Conference attended to the duties of the preacher in charge, and received his share of the quartorage. He had then sent up his name to Talladega to be received into the Alabama Conference of the Northern Church, and would have been at Talladega that very day, in person, but for the fact that at the time he was to start to that place he was sick.

There is on the Evergreen circuit a church known as the Union Camp Ground. At this place a new house of worship was built, and in 1866 a deed was secured to it for the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This deed, which had not been recorded, was in the possession of Brother Barlow, one of the trustees. A very short time before his affiliation with the Northern Methodists was made public, and while he was acting as our preachor, and, to those who did not know his secrets, apparently acting in good faith, this man, W. P. Miller, went to Brother Barlow, and with such pretension as only W. P. Miller and a hypocrite can make, told him that the deed should be recorded, and that he was going to Evergreen, the county-town, and wanted the deed to carry with him for that purpose, and that he would return it to him in a few days. Brother Barlow, believing every word he said, let him have the deed. But he never had it recorded, and he never returned it, as he never intended to return it. In a little while after he got the deed in his possession he received his appointment from the Northern bishop, and organized a society at the Union Camp Ground church, of about twenty-one members, several of them his own family, leaving us one hundred or more members. He then went to the man who had made the deed to the Church South, and procured from him another deed, securing to the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States of America a half interest in this house and lot, and the other half interest to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He then posted off, without delay, and had this deed recorded. He told Brother Harper, one of our trustees, who, without any authority from our congregation or Quarterly Conference, or any one else, assumed to act for our church in this matter, that he considered it providential that the deed made to the Church South had not been recorded! Consider how and when he got that deed of ours in his possession, and what he did with it. Did he not get it under false pretence? Did not he and the man who made the deed and our trustee act without authority, and in violation of both civil and ecclesiastical law? Did that man who had deeded the house and lot to the Church South have any more authority to make another deed to it, and to other parties, than Bishop Clark or the Queen of England? But really in this transaction Miller was very liberal. I am profoundly astonished, when I consider how he has acted in this and other matters, that he did not give the sole interest in that house and lot to the "loyal mother church," and I have been trying to conjecture what evil design he had in allowing the Church South a joint interest in that property. Time will perhaps reveal it.

At Mt. Hermon, another appointment on the circuit, he formed a society of a few members which he proselyted from us—all we had but one. The house here was a good framed building, as was the one at the Union Camp Ground. There was hanging over it a debt of one hundred dollars, in consequence of which we had never secured a deed to it. Miller paid the one hundred dollars and secured a deed exclusively to the Methodist Episcopal Church North.

One can scarcely believe the low, mean tricks to which he has resorted for the purpose of proselyting our members. The prominent pleas by which he seeks to win adherence to this cause are: 1. That the Methodist Episcopal Church North is the "mother church." 2. That she proposed to the Methodist Episcopal Church South to unite the two churches upon Christian grounds and equal terms, and the Church South, instigated by ecclesiastical and civil disloyalty, refused to unite with the "mother church." 3. The Methodist Episcopal Church South, being bankrupt, is not able to support her ministry and institutions. The "mother church" has a full and inexhaustible treasury, and is paying, and will continue to pay, her preachers sustaining and remunerating salaries.

Speaking of his own experience, he tells the people he has enjoyed more spirituality and had nearer access to and sweeter communion with God since he has been in the "mother church" than he did for years in the Church South. Verily, this is good news, a fair report. The grapes of Eschol were nothing to this. But if he is near to God, and enjoys communion with Him, the time has come to expunge from the Scriptures Prov. vi, 16-19; Amos iii, 3; 2d Cor. vi, 15.

As I have stated above, in 1861 he made speeches in support of the cause of secession. One of his speeches, which was published in the Marianna Patriot, is still in existence to testify to his sentiments, and is a rare document.

On one occasion, arriving at the place of his quarterly meeting, he found a crowd gathered in the church-yard, engaged in abusing a certain man who was dodging the conscript officer. In their wrath the crowd declared that this deserter of the cause so dear to every true Southern man ought to be hung. Miller, more enthused with the war spirit than they all, and his heart swelling with profoundest patriotism, pulled his suspenders from behind his vest and said, "Here are my gallowses; they are good enough to hang such a fellow, and you can have them for that purpose." During the war he prayed for cholera, smallpox and yellow fever to enter the Federal camps, and prayed God to drive the Federal hosts, who were seeking plunder and devastation, before the victorious Confederates like chaff before the wind. In his sermons he assumed that secession was an heir of heaven, etc. Now he says he was never a secessionist, and proposes to take the "test oath."

I have given this history of this man in order that the public may know the prominent agent employed and paid by the Methodist Episcopal Church North to do her work in this section of the country in maintaining loyalty, converting the heathen, and "spreading scriptural holiness over these lands."

To conclude, some few have joined this church, and a few others will join it, but her success will not be very great, nor very rapid, under her present programme. Some have already come back to us who went out from us.

ANSON WEST.

THE ARMIES OF EUROPE.—Russia has an army of 1,440,000 men, which it obtains by keeping its soldiers under arms during fifteen consecutive years. Austria has 1,200,000 men. These soldiers are obliged to serve only six years, but the entire able-bodied class is taken without distinction, and without the privilege of obtaining substitutes. Prussia, who is about to absorb the entire Confederation of the North, has 1,500,000 men. The entire youth is taken for seven years, and if need be compelled to serve again for eleven years, so that a Prussian subject is not entirely free from military service until the expiration of thirty-nine years—after one has already commenced to descend the downhill of life! Italy, who calls out all its classes, has 900,000 men under arms. Eleven years of military service! Poor Italians! All more or less born poets, artists, musicians, dreamers of the far niente, for which their mild climate gives an inspiration, and who for the glory of their monarch are obliged to put themselves in military clothes and be soldiers! In France, where the service was seven years, it is to be increased to nine, and the army will be shortly 860,000, and in an immediate future 1,100,000.

THE Hudson Bay Company, which formerly paid a dividend of 60 to 70 per cent. per annum, has recently declared the modest sum of four per cent. in a year's earnings.

GERMAN SETTLEMENT IN TEXAS.

By 9 o'clock we are in New Braunfels, the Teutonic center of Texas. The Comal river, which we cross before it enters the Guadalupe, is like the San Marcos—very near its head of springs, but large enough to furnish abundance of mill-power, an item in the present prosperity and future of New Braunfels. A cotton factory and flouring mills are running, and a large wool factory is nearly ready, upon which the stockholders make confident calculations of liberal dividends. The town is very German—the houses with blue sash and wainscotings, small windows and narrow piazzas, and abounding with little snuggeries; the laboring men in blue shirts, the women and children in blue; and everybody working cheerfully at something, the cow stable and hay-stack crowded so close to the dwelling house as to indicate dearness or scarcity of town lots. Ten miles before and after passing New Braunfels, though the country is well settled, I saw not a dozen negroes. A thrifty, industrious and apparently contented population surround this favorite settlement. Their land is rich, and they are not so greedy of acres as of the yield of acres. I stopped at a farm house on an errand, and got a view of its home life. In a kitchen adjoining the dwelling, and on a wide fire-place, raised three feet above the floor, the busy wife was preparing dinner. The ample barn held store enough for winter in a higher latitude. Pipe in mouth, my Dutchman showed me his stable and shed, where were ox yokes and bows, plows, scythes, mowing machine, rakes, etc., and work bench for small jobs and coopering—all out of the way and out of the weather, in good order and ready. "I no likes to borrow of my neighbors," said he; "here it ish, every ting ven I want him." These German farmers make great use of sorghum-cane, not for syrup, but as good for horses and cattle. They gather two crops a year, and have ascertained that an acre of ground yields more in this shape than in any other. The German farmer is the model man for Texas as it is and will be. The emigrant from Faderland in himself unites muscle and mind, patience, diligence, frugality, enterprise. Already this population is a strong element in Texas and daily growing. At Galveston I saw a freshly arrived company of 250 hale and hearty Germans, on their way to New Braunfels; thence to go to Fredericksburg, Llano, and elsewhere. With many good qualities they bring two very bad ones—what is politely called free-thinking (instead of infidelity) and Sabbath-breaking. But the German Methodist to all sterling national traits adds an earnest, methodical piety. Our church has an important interest here. The whole German Methodist work is thrown into one district, and though this stretches into three Conferences, it is attached and reports to the mother Conference. We have about seven hundred members, and several valuable preachers, traveling and local. This people abide steadfastly in our connection, in the face of many efforts and temptations to draw them away. A German church without Sabbath-school and parsonage is not considered complete. They want the whole services of their pastor, and the schedule of pastoral duties is more closely and faithfully filled among them than among their American brethren. In discipline they attend to everything, great and small. At the Conference in Houston they were strikingly ready, accurate and full in all their reports, and showed such system and progress in their district as to elicit the admiration of all. They are raising up their own ministry. I trust they will soon have their own Christian Advocate. As we are a blessing to them, the Germans will be a blessing to us. Our principal church is in New Braunfels.

We took our nooning on the banks of Cibolo, (pronounced Seewilla,) and after sundown, passing by the Alamo, of famous memory, found most comfortable lodgings at the Menger (called Mingoe) House.—Bishop McTyeire's Letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE London correspondent of the New York Times says: The result of the annual posting of accounts in this country is not very satisfactory. The wheat crop last year fell short 24,000,000 bushels. Potatoes were less than ever since the Irish famine. The metal trade, except tin, has been as bad as could be. There are reduction of wages in the great iron works. The woolen and cotton trades have been dull and disastrous.

THE number of spindles employed in Great Britain, in the manufacture of cotton, exceeds 36,000,000. When in good work, as many as 63,994,602 miles of thread are made per working day of ten hours, or sufficient to encompass the earth four times in every minute.

The Viceroy of Egypt as a Farmer.

As nothing that concerns the varieties of labor, or the systematic development of the higher products of the soil in any portion of the world, is unimportant to the people of the South, we publish some interesting details upon the success of the Viceroy of Egypt as an agriculturist. We have been furnished with these by a gentleman who has himself been in Egypt, and has seen the system in active operation. They may, therefore, be relied on.

Until within a year or two the Viceroy of Egypt cultivated three hundred thousand acres of land in cotton, sugar and rice. He has the finest sugar house in the world at Rhoda. The sugar cane, however, does not flourish in the Egyptian delta, or as low down the Nile as Grand Cairo. The dryness of the air in Upper Egypt will stand in the way of its culture.

The overflow of the Nile takes place at the season of low water in the Mississippi. The irrigating canals are of service only two or three months after the subsidence of the river; and when their supply is exhausted the water has to be raised entirely by hand or by machinery from the river bed to a height varying from fifteen to thirty feet. The average product of cotton in Egypt varies according to the completeness of the irrigation. Seven and even eight hundred pounds per acre have been raised upon the best plantations; the average is between four and five hundred pounds—about the same as on the rich bottom lands of the Yazoo river in favorable seasons.

There are now about four hundred thousand acres of land cultivated in cotton in Egypt, for the most part in immense plantations, owned by the Viceroy and rich pachas. This is about the capacity of the country under present circumstances, and we may expect about four hundred thousand bales of cotton from Egypt for some years to come. The staple is longer than that of American uplands.

The Viceroy gets his cotton for almost nothing. On more than one occasion he has ordered regiments of troops into the fields to pick cotton. He has also a pleasant way of confiscating plantations to which he happens to take a fancy. Not long since he confiscated nearly all the immense estates of Helim Pacha. During the last few years the Suez Canal has attracted a multitude of laborers—fellahs, as they are called—from Egypt. From this cause and the stimulus given to cotton-raising, the cost of labor has been enhanced several fold. The best hands now get about twenty, and medium hands about ten dollars per month, without food or clothing. Many of the fellahs, however, receive little pay beside the use of a small piece of land.

Before the war it was not uncommon to see Bedouin Arabs in the shadow of the Great Pyramid, clothed in American cotton. Should our planters continue in the old way of raising cotton, it may not be the most improbable thing in the future to expect to see freedmen in the Mississippi valley clothed in Egyptian fabrics.—New Orleans Times.

THE SUPREME COURT.

The determination of the Supreme Court to postpone the decision in the McCardle case, announced in our dispatches this morning, will, in the ears of many, sound the knell of the Republic; for thousands, relying upon the integrity and courage of the highest judicial tribunal in the land, have still hoped that our republican institutions would survive the revolutionary action of the majority in Congress.

We have defended the court; when we could, against its assailants, and apologized for acts that in our opinion admitted of no defence. We can conceive of no apology for its action in the McCardle case.

This case was properly made up, and regularly before the court. It involved grave questions of constitutional law, affecting the personal rights of eight millions of people. It had been maturely considered by the judges. It is no secret that an opinion was prepared, with the approval of Chief Justice Chase and Judges Nelson, Grier, Clifford, Davis and Field, (Judges Swayne and Miller dissenting,) adverse to the constitutionality of the reconstruction acts. That opinion promulged as the decision of the court would have restored civil law in ten States now subject to military rule, and restored civil government to eight millions of American citizens.

But the court, overawed by Congress, has, for political considerations, shrunk from the performance of its duty, left the chains on the limbs of one-fourth of the population of the United States, and consented to the overthrow of the government—it has abnegated its own functions, and surrendered the power of the government to the legislature.

It is plain now that the court will not interpose against the revolution—that it will not maintain its own dignity, assert its own authority, and vindicate the majesty of the laws—that the friends of constitutional government can repose no trust in it.—Selma Times.

Recent Scientific Discoveries.

A NEW METHOD OF MAKING WHITE LEAD.—Several processes have been devised for producing white lead in less time than is required by the old Dutch process, still followed in the manufacture of the best article. They have resulted, however, for the most part, in comparative failures. The pigment produced by precipitation has in general a crystalline character, which seriously interferes with its covering property, and thus deteriorates its value. A process has recently been devised by M. A. Girard, which is perhaps superior to most of the new modes of manufacturing white lead. Metallic lead is, in the first place, granulated. It is then placed in a barrel (which must be made of beech or horn-beam wood, not oak,) with one fourth its weight of pure water. The barrel is placed on an axis, so that it can be made to rotate at about thirty or forty turns a minute, and arrangements are made so that a current of air can be forced through at the same time. After rotating for about two hours almost all the lead will be found oxydized; and now a current of carbonic acid is substituted for the air, and the rotation continued for four or five hours longer. After this time nearly all the lead will be found converted into the hydrated carbonate, the true white lead, which can be separated by decantation from any of the metal unacted on, and washed and dried. The product so made, we are inclined to believe, will be as good as that produced by the old process.

A BLACK ANILINE DYE FOR WOOLEN CLOTH.—We recently gave a process for a black aniline marking ink which attracted some attention. To-day we find a process for dyeing wool black by means of an aniline compound. The yarn or cloth is first submitted for an hour to a bath composed of 1 litre (two pints) of water; 5 grammes (75 grs.) of bichromate of potash; 3 grammes (46 grs.) of sulphate of copper; and 2 grammes (31 grs.) of sulphuric acid. The bath must be used at nearly a boiling heat. After this the cloth or yarns are well washed and then plunged in a solution of oxalate of aniline of 1 or 2 degrees Baume (sp. gr. 1.007 to 1.014.) They are said thus to be dyed of a beautiful solid black, which will have the advantage of resisting all the agents that usually discharge or alter the color of black cloth. This process, if it answers well, and, since it is the invention of M. Persoz, we are bound to regard it with favor, will be a great gain to the dyers of black cloth. Some extra brilliancy, it is said, may be given by rinsing the cloth in a bath of cream of tartar solution, with a little sulphuric acid, washing again, and soaping.

A MODE OF TESTING STEAM BOILERS.—Steam boilers are weakened by long working, and the owners are uncertain as to what pressure they can resist. Few are possessed of a hydraulic pump by which they can be tested; but Mr. Robinson, an American engineer, gives a method by which a boiler can be tested by any working engineer. He completely fills the boiler with water up to the throttle and safety valves, and makes everything tight, leaving only the pressure gauge open. He then puts a fire under; the water slowly expands, and the pressure is of course shown on the gauge. If there is a weak place it will give way long before the water reaches the boiling temperature, and no sudden or dangerous explosion will happen. If no rupture takes place the pressure shown on the gauge will teach up to what point the boiler may be safely worked. Engineers will, no doubt, give us their opinion of this mode of testing an old boiler.

THE SEPARATION OF OLEINE FROM STEARINE, ETC.—Bourgonguon gives a process by which he says oleine may be easily separated from the solid fatty acids, without the liberation of any oleic acid, as usually happens in the processes ordinarily followed. We give it for what it may be worth, without expressing any opinion on its merits. The tallow is first melted with an equal weight of water, and the mixture is warmed with 10 per cent. of strong ammonia. In this way a thick emulsion is obtained, which is heated to a boiling temperature, to get rid of the ammonia and drive off the water. The residue is then submitted to pressure, by which the oleine is perfectly separated, and the solid acids left harder than usual.—American Artisan.

THE London Times lost 5,000 subscribers last year, and did not make as much money by £6,000 as in 1856. But then its profits in that year were £700,000, or nearly $5,000,000 in greenbacks, so it is not in a suffering condition.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so, by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.—When the Preacher receives the name of a subscriber, he should receive the money with it, and a three cent stamp, for the purpose of sending both name and money at the same time in the same letter. Suppose the letter never arrives—the loss is ours; and the subscriber receives his paper. We hope that our agents and subscribers will see the force of these views—we feel them.

PERSONAL.

I have now in pocket and on file a large number of letters, which I hope soon to answer. Some of them are from venerable bishops, dear friends, subscribers, and contributors to the ADVOCATE. So far I have not found the leisure, or the time, or the health required to do it, and make this statement as an apology for what might otherwise seem to be a neglect. J. C. KEENER.

POST OFFICE ORDERS.

Whenever our agents can get these orders we hope they will take the pains to do so, paying for them out of the money in hand.

N. B.—Money sent in small amounts in letters is much safer than in large.

CITY MONEY.

Four dollars of New Orleans city money will pay for the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for one year—that is if sent forward at once. What it will do in a month we cannot promise.

VOTING.

The apathy which may have heretofore prevented our people from registering and voting should give way before the threatened, we may say appalling, evils which an adoption of the proposed Constitution will fasten upon us.

LIFE AND DEATH.—It has been estimated that the number of deaths per year throughout the world is about thirty-two millions. Assuming this to be correct, the deaths each day would be about 88,000; 3,600 per hour, 60 per minute, and thus every second carries one human being into eternity. A calculation of the annual births on the globe shows that whereas 60 persons die per minute, 70 children are born, and thus the increase of the population is kept up.

THE GLORY IN US.

The "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" is doubtless "the glory which shall be revealed in us." In both passages the glory is connected with "our light afflictions" and "the sufferings of this present time." "Revealed in us."—There is a wide difference between what shall be revealed to us and what shall be revealed in us. What is out of us is clearly to be separated from what may be within. There is an outward and an inward glory. Material things, as the heavens and the firmament, declare the glory of God, and this exhibition of the divine handiwork is entirely external to ourselves. Whatever the things which are seen declare, are revealed to us. We may apply the same rule to the disclosures of the heavenly state. Even in material objects, the present visible world is scarcely an earnest of the beautiful and sublime which invest the scenery of the incorruptible inheritance. Besides all the external adornments there are manifestations of intelligence in the persons and forms of angels; and God himself is exhibited in the symbols of an indescribable splendor. The glory revealed to us is thus distinctly conceivable: something as much external to us in heaven as are fields and stars and mountains here on the earth.

On the other hand the glory within must be removed from the sensuous, and from objects and persons external to the soul. It is spiritual, and relates to the thoughts, tempers and affections. It is a spirit divested of sin, disenthralled and born from above. Here is something more beautiful than any landscape, earthly or heavenly. A soul reaching purity through the baptism of trouble and death, and renewed by the grace of the Holy Spirit. This defines the connection between present suffering and future happiness. It is not simply a contrast arbitrarily established, nor loss and compensation, nor reward bestowed, though all of these may appear in the result. Certain causes are described as associated with this gracious end. They work for us, and are the conditions of the glory to be revealed in us. We know that no such result is necessarily attached to affliction. The greatest sufferers here are not the greatest saints, nor are earthly troubles always followed by the rest which remaineth for the people of God. Submissive faith converts sorrow into a blessing, and makes it the means of developing every Christian grace; whilst without faith the sorrow of the world worketh only death.

The glory in us is therefore a present glory, although not altogether revealed. It is perhaps incomplete in the condition of being wrought, and preparing to break forth and cast off the shell of chrysalis. The finishing touches of a disciplinary providence are yet to be given, and the picture awaits the final pencilings which are to give it the stamp of perfection. Whilst the believer is conscious of the great work which is going forward in the soul, the veil of incompleteness hangs over it, and he cannot now realize its nature and grandeur. The treasure is in earthen vessels, and the frailties of nature darken the lustre of the inward life. Comparative obscurity invests the righteous, as they are seen and judged by the world. It is in the final day that they shall "shine forth in the kingdom of their Father." But it is equally true that now the actual glory, already in the soul, is in a state of eclipse to our own consciousness. We can see in others qualities of virtue and excellence which they do not see themselves; and others may behold in us the exhibition of graces which we can hardly persuade ourselves to have any existence.

The sanctified cause throws over the soul a cloud which conceals from us what is being effected. Suffering depresses while it continues, and temptations excite self-distrust and humiliation. We are wrapped in the smoke and flame of the refining fire, and the present effect is to show us the alloy and drosses, rather than the fine gold. It is perhaps God's wise purpose, now, to manifest in us what is evil, and not what is good. Vile and sinful qualities are displayed to the conscience in the light of his countenance, that they may be overcome and destroyed, while the surpassing attainments of holiness are shaded and placed in a subdued light for the present. If in this life there is a sanctified state wherein we emerge from this atmosphere of dust and smoke, and conflict, and wherein we bask in the complacency of a pure heart, even here the fullness of the glory must be shrouded in a considerable degree. "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." For the present, our sonship is manifest, and we are assured by the Holy Ghost, and confirmed therein by the witness of our own spirit. What we are we shall be, for death neither begins nor finishes the work of grace.

It is this revelation of the glory in us that is presented as a matter of experience in the future life. Now, it may be neither expedient nor possible. There awaits us a wonderful inward as well as outward revelation; an apocalypse of the soul in the unfolding of the redeemed and sanctified powers and attainments to our own amazed consciousness. It is this fact which bridges over the apparently great and violent transition from earth to heaven. Without this inward glory the outward would oppress and overwhelm. Without it the fellowship of angels would abash, and the divine presence would utterly confound. The glory in us is revealed just where it is needed to place us in accord with the heavenly state, and to break the overpowering shock of what would be otherwise an abrupt and fearful transition. It is not unusual to find a certain sense of unreadiness in the most exemplary Christians, which yields to assurance and triumph only in the last hours of life. There the obscurity gives way, and the inward glory begins to brighten and to assert the presence of an adequate preparation for the final change.

The religion of forms and external rites vanishes before this conception of the glory in us. The kingdom of God is within us. It cometh not with observation, nor is it tied to visible temples and sacraments. Neither are the manifestations of heaven, things to be gazed upon and wondered at, as men now look upon the altars and frescoes of a cathedral. What is awful, spiritual and divine is within. There will be nothing in heaven, apart from God, so glorious as the pure heart; and of all the revelations which shall come pealing upon the ear and flashing upon the eye, there will be nothing to compare with "the glory revealed in us." *

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

During the last month we have received a good share of new subscribers; and also a large number of names has been struck from our mail list whose time had expired. We are glad to know that our friends in the Montgomery Conference are introducing the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE into regions where it has not been since the war. If hard work and a desire to aid the preachers in their labor of love, joined with deepest sympathy for the sorrows and perplexities of the noblest people upon which the sun ever shone, can make up for the many defects of a paper, this ADVOCATE certainly deserves a wider patronage. Last week the citizens of Montgomery were fairly represented in a list of renewals and new subscribers sent by the preacher in charge of that important appointment; but there are several places in the bounds of our patronizing Conferences where many subscriptions have run out, and are not renewed because the preachers are all too busy on week-days and too full of preaching on Sundays to even so much as mention the subject of the ADVOCATE.

Why will not some good soul who has the rheumatism, or one who is too deaf to go to church, or whose children are all married off, or some solitary widower in search of more comfort than can be found in a room which contains a chest of drawers, a cross-legged cot and a wash-stand, take this ADVOCATE in hand, and canvass all those regions where the people want preaching, but are too poor to pay a preacher, and do a good work by sending this preacher to every door direct? If a man is bashful, and all merit is more or less so, here is an easy method and theme of unfailing interest just to his hand, which will introduce him to every family in the circuit without a jar. If the presiding elder will hunt up such a man and give him a line of general greeting, and send him forth on such a mission, it will serve to keep up things in an old-field circuit until somebody can get there.

NEW BOOKS.

A French Country Family, by Madame DeWitt. Translated by Mrs. Craik, (Miss Mulock.) New York: Harper Bros., 1868. 12mo.

The design of the gifted translator is to introduce to those who read only English, and are full of English-prejudices, a picture of French family life, soberly drawn, and not as set forth in the modern sensational French novel.

The style is delightfully easy, the story engaging to the young and the old, and the sentiment elevated—just such a book as we often desire for the instruction and entertainment of the whole family circle. The boys at home seized upon it with avidity.

Also by Messrs. Harper and Bros., New York, Nos. 307, 308, 310 of the Library of Select Novels; the Brownlows, by Mrs. Oliphant—a work of power and finish, which, in numbers, has been recently completed in Blackwood.

Margaret's Engagement, 1868, and One of the Family, by the author of "Carlyon's Year." 1868.

The fourth volume of the History of the Netherlands, by Mr. Motley. Harper & Bros., 1868. 8vo.

We shall notice at length this welcome volume after reading it. It is only necessary to those who are acquainted with Mr. Motley's Dutch Republic to announce the appearance of anything from his wonderful pen—though he did hate Confederates.

TEXAS AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.—The following, from the N. O. Times of the 1st instant, shows that the prospects for an early communication by railroad between New Orleans and Texas is brightening:

We are rejoiced to learn that a definite proposition has been made by responsible and competent parties, which, if accepted, will lead to the rapid completion of the long desired and much needed railroad connection between this city and Sabine, Texas. T. L. Price and Mr. P. M. Choteau, of St. Louis, widely known as gentlemen of energy, enterprise and large means, have proposed, in consideration of ten years' lease of the Opelousas Railroad to Berwick's Bay, to complete the connection to the Sabine in thirty months, provided the bondholders of the road subscribe to the stock of the completed road the amount of their matured coupons, and provided that on the completion of the enterprise the present stockholders of the Opelousas road are to consent to a reduction of stock to its present value. This proposition merits the most earnest consideration of those immediately interested, and our citizens generally will take a deep interest in the determination of a question so important to the future welfare of our city.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES OF THE LAW SCHOOL.—Lyceum Hall was yesterday crowded with a brilliant audience on the occasion of the commencement exercises of the Law School of the University of Louisiana. The address of Hon. Randel Hunt, Dean of the Faculty, was characterized by the eloquence, great erudition and wise counsel for which the speaker is famous. Walter H. Rogers, Esq., who represented the alumni, also delivered a brief speech.

The valedictory was delivered by Mr. R. S. E. Upton.

The following is a list of the graduates: Messrs. Marion Bankson; Chas. B. Buddecke; Paul Capdeviel; Henry B. Claiborne; Gabriel Fernandez; John J. Finney; John Le Monnier; Andrew McCollam; Jos. C. Pierce; Paul Robert; Victor de St. Romes; Edward B. Talbot; Theodore Uhlhorn; R. S. E. Upton and Clement Walker.—N. O. Times.

DR. HAVEN ON DR. NEWMAN.

The Zion's Herald, the organ of the New England Methodist Radicals, takes the President of the Thompson Biblical Institute of this city to serious task for excluding colored people from the body of his church. That a house which has been built by the missionary and the church extension societies of Northern Methodism, to be a light in a dark place, should have been dedicated with the negroes in the gallery, stowed away like so much lumber, in the spirit and style of that caste-prejudice which its chief object was to condemn, is declared to be a great scandal to Christianity. We think that these accusations come with a bad grace from the editor of the Herald, who recently declined occupying the same bed with a colored brother. Even things which are pleasant in small quantities become disagreeable in any considerable bulk—otto of roses, for instance. If Dr. Haven himself can't stand one, how many should Dr. Newman be required to entertain? A few negroes scattered here and there, as in New England, furnish a sufficient basis for political and ecclesiastical speculation or experiment, without seriously affecting either society or government. They are in just the quantity of an agreeable spice. But down here, where they can fill a church or a concert-room upon the slightest notice, and pervade the surface of the earth and the surrounding atmosphere in large excess, doctrines of social equality and universal enfranchisement cease to be pleasant abstractions. Dr. N. can stand a few in the altar, religiously, or at his own table, socially, with a bishop to share the affliction; but in any other proportion this becomes a question of quantity and not of quality. With a bishop he was photographed with the colored brethren; and, with a bishop to divide the honor, he might even consent to do that which Dr. Haven declined:

"Spend the day and share the night" with the brethren. But that is a very small matter compared with being doomed to swelter and perpetually struggle for breath in a hot climate, with an audience that can yield nothing but admiration, under the most favorable circumstances.

Last year the bishop of the New England Conference sent a colored man to a white congregation. The preacher was well educated, etc.; but did the brethren and sisters receive him? By no manner of means; they sent him back whence he came. Thereupon the New England Conference wrote an address to their churches, beseeching brethren to remember that God had made all people "of one blood," that they were now living in the nineteenth century, that Russia had just set millions of serfs free, that the "sum of all villainies" had by the providence of God passed away, that they themselves carried the flag of human progress, and begged them, for the sake of all souls, all things, and the whole country, to lead off in breaking down all caste and receive colored pastors, and not suffer the Philistines to say, "see there, after forty years' training these people are not yet willing to receive a colored man into their pulpits or their families." What effect this plea had upon the churches we have not learned, but, judging from the recent close elections in Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, we suppose the white people there are too equally divided upon the negro to receive one single colored pastor.

The Northern man's love for the negro is a mere theory, an affectation, a deceit, an enormous falsehood and swindle. At home he never preaches to him, nor suffers him to sit beside him in church, nor to drive a carriage, nor to ride with him in an omnibus, nor to vote, nor to hold office. There is not one colored Methodist congregation of the M. E. Church in all New England and New York, and Pennsylvania. But down here he must be transformed wondrously; he must love the colored man, eat with him, weep with him, and appear in the same picture with him. Is it unreasonable then, if he expects to be sympathized with in turn, for all this suffering—a little consideration, some balm, an office, or an occasional collection? He does not wish to be sacrificed entirely for the sake of a principle which belongs as much to the public at home as to himself. We think that, considering the amount of unpleasant dirty work these pioneers of Northern Methodism have had to do in the way of seizing churches, holding churches, and being kicked out of churches, the amount of actual toting of burdens, which neither the elegant editor of the Zion's Herald nor any other decent man would have touched with one of his fingers, the amount of mean hugging, of stilling philanthropy and social tartar emetic to be gone through with daily pro bono publico, they might certainly be spared the animadversions of Northern brethren who look on and complain at a safe distance.

There may be a good deal of stealing yet to be done by this Bureau of Balaam. We advise those who are at home not to be too captious. They will not get a better set of agents than those Bishop Ames first selected—men of all sorts of work, and with consciences like gutta percha.

DISRAELI AND GLADSTONE.

We quote from a correspondent of a Northern paper a description of the shock of encounter between these great Parliamentary leaders upon the Irish church question:

But it was not generally known what line Mr. Gladstone had resolved to take. It is on church questions especially that the Liberal leader has advanced with the greatest circumspection. There was truth in Mr. Disraeli's sarcasm, that his efforts for Irish reform had consisted largely in making speeches for the perpetuation of the Irish church.

When, therefore, Mr. Gladstone rose, at 10 o'clock on Monday night, the cheers with which he was greeted were a demonstration of encouragement as well as of the enthusiasm of his supporters. The House was crowded to excess. No doubt Mr. Gladstone's intimate friends knew what he had resolved on, but the bulk of his supporters did not know whether he stood ready to head an immediate movement for the overthrow of the Irish church. The exordium gave them hope, for almost the opening sentence declared that a crisis in the history of Ireland had been reached, the gravity of which the government had failed to comprehend. During the first hour of his speech he went with great minuteness over the smaller Irish questions. Mr. Disraeli's Catholic University was demolished. Then the Land was discussed, but discussed with caution, and dropped without the distinct enunciation of anything that could be called a policy based on a tangible measure of relief.—Even this caution and abstinence were in accordance with the general result of the previous three nights' debate. Finally came the church, with regard to which, said Mr. Gladstone, he had witnessed with a satisfaction almost equaled by his surprise, the extraordinary progress of opinion that had taken place both within and without the House. Nowhere, he might have added, more extraordinary than in his own case. A few sentences removed all doubt of his final decision, and the enthusiasm of the House broke out every moment in cheers, which reached their climax when their long hesitating champion declared that the Irish church as a State church must cease to exist. From that moment dates the reorganization, or rather the regeneration of the Liberal party. But Mr. Gladstone, having made up his mind, was far from proposing to stop with a mere announcement of his opinion, or with a theoretical dissent from the do-nothing policy of the ministry. His recommendation to Mr. Maguire to withdraw his resolution was followed by the formal declaration that the statements of the government were to the Liberal side wholly unsatisfactory, and that unless its head had something new to offer, the opposition would make a proposal, and ask the opinion of the House upon the Irish church question. There could not be a more distinct challenge, and there could not be a heartier welcome than the opposition benches gave to this clarion note from their leader. The days of great Parliamentary contests seemed to have come back.

Mr. Disraeli's reply was insolent beyond conception. The words of it you can read for yourself in the printed report. The manner of it is scarcely to be described. In no other man would the House have tolerated it, and it went far beyond the license in which even Disraeli is usually indulged. There was no paragraph that was not edged with a sarcasm against Mr. Gladstone—few sentences that did not overflow with contemptuous bitterness toward the members of either party who could be suspected of convictions. In its way nothing could be more brilliant; but what a speech to be delivered in Parliament! I have heard Disraeli often; I never heard him approach his performance of Monday. There was no lack of readiness in Mr. Disraeli to meet the issue so unexpectedly presented to him. No lack of courage either, and no lack of the unscrupulous ingenuity which makes him the most formidable tactician in England. With savage sarcasms falling every minute from his lips, he presented himself to the House as the sole remaining champion of the church. The attack upon the Irish church he declared to be a covert attack upon the English church. The principle of endowments was at stake; and with this cry he rallied the Tory squires to his support. It is certainly true that the demolition of the church in Ireland will weaken the church in England, but it is far from being true that the Liberals have any such purpose or belief. But Mr. Disraeli is too shrewd to be drawn into a defense of the Irish church. It cannot be defended, and he knows it. It may be upheld, and its existence prolonged a few years by persuading the country party and the High Church party that the Liberals have begun a crusade against the English establishment. Yet, even in that view, the invective of Mr. Disraeli's speech was pushed further than policy would have suggested, and its rancor, its furious animosity against Mr. Gladstone, were partly due to a cause which seldom stimulates into extravagance this cold-blooded antagonist. Repose of manner was gone. The gloomy face was lighted by an artificial excitement, and decorum was thrown to the winds. Even the cries from the opposition benches, the satirical "Hear, hear," were caught up by the unbalanced voice of the swaying orator and repeated with a sneer of affected or very likely genuine contempt. And yet neither passion nor any artificial cause had clouded the splendor of this wonderful intellect, however much they may have upset its judgment. As a specimen of gladiatorial oratory this speech has seldom been surpassed.

Address of Mr. Higby on the Grain Trade.

L. J. Higby, Esq., is a very large owner of grain warehouses and elevators at the port of Milwaukie. He has had perfect experience of the grain export trade by way of the lakes. The great proportion of the grain price in the foreign market absorbed by the cost of lake or overland transportation to the eastern ports decided him and others to explore the Mississippi with a view to reduce this expense, and thus to constitute, if possible, a regulator of, and a relief from, the excessive freights to which the farmers and shippers of the West were subject. As a practical grain dealer and substantial capitalist Mr. Higby has come among us. Satisfied that the transfer at St. Louis would be of little value without similar facilities here, he and others have purchased a river front, and put their money in one or more large elevators. They ask the co operation of our citizens and Common Council. Both of these we trust they will receive, for we know no enterprise of more vital importance to New Orleans. We call the attention of readers to a few points in the address of Mr. Higby, made before the Chamber of Commerce on Monday night:

1. That bulk grain can be shipped by way of New Orleans in as good condition as by the Erie Canal.

2. That it can be shipped from St. Louis to New York, by way of New Orleans, at twenty-seven cents per bushel, or for fourteen cents per bushel less than by way of Chicago.

3. That it can be shipped from St. Louis to Liverpool, by the way of New Orleans, for six cents per bushel less than by way of New York.

4. That a bushel of grain will take eighteen days to go from St. Louis to New York, by way of New Orleans, and to Liverpool thirty-four days.

5. That it will require thirty days to reach New York from St. Louis by way of Chicago, and forty-four days to reach Liverpool by the same route.

If, then, the condition of the grain be as good when shipped by way of New Orleans as by way of Chicago—if the cost and time occupied by the Northern route be about fifty per cent. greater than by way of New Orleans—what other obstacle can remain to our securing this trade? The address of Mr. Higby will be found conclusive upon this subject, and his character and investments furnish a guarantee that his opinions are alike sound and sincere.—N. O. Commercial Bulletin.

Conquering an Elephant.—A Prolonged and Desperate Fight.

We copy as follows from the Philadelphia Enquirer of the 1st:

One of the most interesting, exciting and yet hazardous incidents which has occurred for many a day, was the recapture and conquering, on Saturday last, of the huge Asiatic elephant Romeo, belonging to Adam Forepaugh's Menagerie, on the farm of James B. Miller, in Hatboro, a small, unpretending village, twelve miles from this city, upon whose premises he has been quartered during the past winter, together with the white camels, dromedaries, horses, and two other elephants belonging to Mr. Forepaugh's great Zoological and Equestrian Combination, which will open in Philadelphia next week.

It will be no doubt remembered by the majority of our readers that this is the same elephant that killed his keeper. Mr. William P Williams, last December, not long after going into winter quarters. In this extremity Mr. Forepaugh was obliged to secure the services of his old keeper, Mr. Stuart Craven, who had been in charge of him before he was imported to America, and for six years since that event.

Mr. Craven proceeded on Saturday last, assisted by that fearless and intrepid animal performer, Mr. James Forepaugh, to Hatboro, accompanied also by an army of men with ropes, tackles and chains, to bring this monarch of the Oriental jungle to his haunches, who has been a kind of terror in that community ever since the unfortunate death of Mr. Williams.

At first the sight of these men enraged the passionate animal to such an extent that for a moment his pursuers hesitated to approach him, and apparently succumbed to the matchless power of this giant of the desert. Soon, however, preparations were made to conquer him, but "Romeo," conscious of his superior strength, became more combative, and contemptuously treating every effort to secure and subdue him, until it was evident that some more effectual means and appliances must be resorted to in order to dislodge him from his stronghold.—The chief point now to be accomplished was to so hamper and entangle his legs in the massive chains with which he was confined to the stall as to render him at once hors de combat. In this Mr. Craven, assisted by Geo. Forepaugh, the renowned elephant hunter, was more than equal to the task.

By an adroit movement of a species of lasso, a large rope was looped around his hind leg, instantly tightened by a triple fall-block, and by the aid of a large concourse of people, attracted by curiosity to witness the capture, he was brought to realize, for the sixth time of his life, that "knowledge is power," and to its mandates he must sooner or later succumb. Before yielding, however, he made some desperate lunges at his keeper, and several times came near annihilating him with his trunk. It was hard for "Romeo," however, to kick against the goads. He gradually found himself in a rack which out-Heroded the palmiest days of the Inquisition.

In spite of himself he was finally brought down, to the no small delight of the spectators. But he was so obstinate and indomitable that he would not beg for mercy. When the elephant is subdued he usually makes his acquiescence manifest by a plaintive noise, which those accustomed to the animal know and understand as well as a mother knows the cry of her child. All day Saturday was consumed, and Saturday night found him still obstinate. Sunday morning came, and still he was unwilling to yield. However excruciating the torture, writhing all day Sunday in his galling chains, Monday morning came, and with it a disposition to yield to the conquest. At 9 o'clock Monday morning Mr. Craven had him completely under his control, and never was a whipped Spaniel more docile.

Loosing his chains, the keeper found no difficulty in conducting the conquered monarch to this city on Monday. As he will be on exhibition at Manayunk, Wednesday, April 1, our citizens need have no apprehension of danger, as "Romeo," like Richard III, is "himself again."

Something of an adequate idea of the marvellous size of this mastodon of the animal kingdom may be formed when it was discovered, on weighing him after his capture, that the scales were brought down to five tons and three hundred pounds.

The total length of electric telegraphs in the world, not including the submarine, amounts to upward of 180,000 miles, which is more than enough to go round the earth half dozen times.

The Strasbourg line of railway has introduced a three story passenger railroad car. The ground floor is the first class, the second class apartments above, while third class passengers must climb to the highest story.

The Mount Cenis tunnel will be lined in its entire length with stones quarried in the immediate vicinity of the two entrances. At the present time the excavations, or headings, are about 1,500 metres in advance of the amount lined.

Value no man for his opinion, but esteem him according as his life corresponds with the rules of piety and justice. A man's actions, not his conceptions, render him valuable.

It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own. But the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of his character.

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. Nancy A. D. Taylor, wife of Merideth S. Taylor, was born in Houston county, Georgia, on the 30th of September, 1836, and died in Marshall, Texas, on the 7th of January, 1868.

Mr. Taylor was moving his family from Pike county, Alabama, to Smith county, Texas. The low stage of water in Red river caused the boat to be sixteen days getting to Shreveport. On the boat Mrs. Taylor was attacked with cholera, and soon after being conveyed to Marshall died. Her bereaved husband writes me that she died calmly, passing off as sweetly as falls an infant to sleep. Her only regret in dying was "leaving her husband and little children."

She joined the Methodist church in 1850, professing religion at that time. Her parents were Primitive Baptists.—My first acquaintance with Mrs. Taylor was in 1864, on my return from my last visit to my mother. My little boy and I were overtaken by a severe rain storm, and had just time to reach her house before the severest of the storm broke upon us. There was no hesitation in receiving us—no other than cordial, generous welcome. The children—some eight or nine of them—partook of the mother's spirit. We left next morning, and talked not a little along the way of that pleasant family.—The impression on little Joe's mind and heart was ineffaceable. Two years after I came on the district, and I seldom failed to make that point when passing that road. Mrs. Taylor had in a large degree what we may term natural goodness. She was one of those ingenuous, hearty souls that make all sunshine about them.

"The heart of her husband did safely trust in her." She beat her whole energy toward seconding his efforts to maintain a large family, and nobly did she do her part. That wearisome trip with him and the little ones was to better their condition. I hated to give them up from this part of the country. Such people are wealth to any state. Why Providence met them thus in the way, and thus deprived them, is a dark mystery. I could write much of Mrs. Taylor, but it is not necessary. She is enshrined in the hearts of those who knew her, and exteaded praise is out of place. While those for whom she lived begin their Texas career, she begins a heavenly one. Her's is best. Noble woman! I am glad I knew her.

Jos. B. Cottrell.

Landreth's Warranted Garden Seeds.

PRIVATE FAMILIES WHO AIM to raise vegetables of the best quality only need not to be reminded that "figs do not grow on thistles," nor that from good seed alone can good vegetables be obtained.

Seeds may, indeed, grow freely enough, but unless they prove good in every respect it were better they had not grown at all. The seeds offered by us being mainly the produce of Bloomsdale, raised under our own personal supervision, with the aid of years of practical experience, we are enabled to speak with entire confidence as to their quality, and of the reasonable probability of satisfactory results.

☞ We have but few "Novelties" to offer. Our experience, obtained at some cost, is that out of the multitude of that class of vegetables advertised for sale, in most cases the good are not new, and the new are not good. Substantial, staple, well-known sorts are in the main the most reliable.

Purchasers who do not reside within ready access of the city, nor near merchants or druggists who vend our seeds, can be supplied by mail, postpaid. Priced Catalogues, for family use, with the Rural Register for 1868 (abounding in useful hints,) will be mailed, without charge, to all who apply enclosing a three-cent stamp. DAVID LANDRETH & SON,

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

CHARLIE AND THE ROBIN'S SONG.

One summer morning early,
When the dew was bright to see,
Our dark-eyed little Charlie
Stood by his mother's knee,
And he heard a robin singing
In a tree, so tall and high;
On the topmost bough 'twas swinging,
Away up in the sky.

"Mamma, the robin's praying,
In the very tree-top there:
Glory! glory! it is saying;
And that is all its prayer.
But God will surely hear him;
And the angels standing by;
For God is very near him,
Away up in the sky."

"My child, God is no nearer
To robin on the tree,
And does not hear him clearer
Than he does you and me:
For he hears the angels harping
In sun-bright glory-drest,
And the little birdlings chirping
Down in their leafy nest."

"Mamma, if you should hide me
Away down in the dark,
And leave no lamp beside me,
Would God then have to hark?
And if I whisper lowly,
All covered in my bed,
Do you think that Jesus holy
Would know what 'twas I said?"

"My darling little lisper,
God's light is never dim;
The very lowest whisper
Is always close to him."

Now the robin's song was filling
The child's soul full of bliss;
The very air was trilling
When his mamma told him this—
And he wished, in childish craving,
For the robin's wings to fly;
To sing on the tree-tops waving,
So very near the sky.

SHE SAW THE DOXOLOGY.—A little girl, ten years old, went up Mount Washington on horseback. She was then ten; if she is alive and lives till next summer she will be twenty. The ladies and gentlemen of our party dismounted upon the rugged summit, where the only vegetation that dared make an attempt to grow was a little stunted, pale-green moss, and gazed as those lifted up from the world into limitless space. Below, stretching outward in all directions, lay a deep silver sea of clouds, amid which lightnings were seen to dart and writhe like gilded serpents, and from which the thunder came up to the ear, peal after peal. We knew that down there rain was descending in a torrent; while on us, who were above the clouds, shone the sun in unobstructed and awful splendor. The eye wandered away like the dove from Noah's ark, that found no place to rest her foot.

"Well, Lucy," said her father, breaking the silence, "there is nothing to be seen, is there?"

The child caught her breath, lifted her clasped hands, and responded reverently—

"O, papa, I see the doxology!"

Yes, everywhere nature speaks to us and says:

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

"NOT 'DENOMINATIONAL."—Rev. Alfred Taylor tells this story of a boy who had risen, under the lure of Sunday school sweat-meats and pic-nics, to the perfection of a certain latter-day idea of undenominational breadth.

"Where do you go to Sunday school, Jimmy?"

"Why, marm, I go to the Baptisses, and Methodisses, and the Presbyterinns, but I've been trying the 'Piscopal' for two or three weeks."

"You don't seem to belnng any where then, Jimmy."

"Why, yes, marm, don't you see? I belongs to 'em all, exceptin' the 'Piscopals, but I'm going to join 'em too, now."

"Well, Jimmy, what's your idea in going to so many?"

"Why, you see, I gets a little of what's going on at 'em all, marm. I gets liberries, and hymn books, and all that; and when they have picnics, I goes to every one of 'em."

HOW TO MAKE BUTTER.—The St. Louis Republican publishes a statement in reference to a "novel process" of making, say twenty pounds of butter out of ten pounds of butter and ten pounds of fresh milk. The Republican said the process had been patented. The local editor of the Memphis Appeal says there is nothing new or patentable in the process at all. He thus describes it, as he has seen it tried: "Take one pound of good butter and one pint of sweet milk, place the same together in a pan over a slow fire, so as to only melt the butter into a pliable state, then stir briskly for about five minutes, being very cautious that the butter does not melt so as to form globules of oil, for, in that case, the milk will "curd." After stirring until the milk is absorbed, cool the pan as quickly as possible by placing it in cold water or some cool place, stirring all the while, when you will find two pounds of good butter, equal in consistency and taste to the best Kentucky clover butter that can be found."

SCIENTIFIC.

FLYING MACHINE IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION IN ST. LOUIS.—W. S. Hutchings, of St. Louis, the inventor, has laid his plans before the best astronants in America, and all pronounce it the only success ever made in ærial navigation—in navigating the air and turning in any direction, at any height, with the pleasure of the navigator. This wonderful invention of navigating the air has been the study of the past century, and has at last been successful. The model has already been built, is twenty-eight inches in height, and works with the utmost ease and upon mechanical and philosophical principles. In constructing this machine the laws of gravitation have been well studied. The large machine now in course of construction measures 28 feet in height, with an expansion of 22 feet; full weight of the entire machine, 285 pounds, when ready for ærial navigation, capable of carrying with ease in the air 150 pounds. The principle is entirely new, and the invention claims the compression of hot and cold air in running a caloric engine which is attached to the back. The body is inclosed in a complete set of mail armor, made of vulcanized India rubber and brass, with glass in front, which protects the engine, and connected by means of a tube passing over the shoulder is a large cylinder, containing the compressed air, which is worked with each hand. By this means the navigator can go up and down with ease, and regulates the engine at his own leisure. Attached to the feet, head and cylinder are double inflated wings, some four feet in length; and by means of cords and India rubber valves are attached to the fly-wheels of the engine on the compressed air principle, eighteen feet in length, and which turn with lightning speed in circular revolution, bearing up the entire machine. Immediately above the engine is attached, by means of cords, a large double inflated parachute, measuring 66 feet in circumference, with a tube connecting from the centre with the caloric engine. This is a protection, in making an ascension, without danger to the æronaut, in case of accident or breaking of the machine. We understand the first trial will take place near this city, with the wonderful feat of jumping out of a balloon at the height of 2,000 feet from the earth; and as the inventor proposes to accomplish this himself, he has great confidence in his own invention. If it is a success, ærial navigation is certainly the most useful invention of modern times, outrivalling the telegraph or steam navigation. More anon.—St. Louis Dispatch.

THE NEW STEAM-MAN.—Every one has heard that in the progress of steam as a locomotive power, and long before the "iron horse" was matured, attempts were made to work a predecessor of his upon four legs. This old English notion has become a new "Yankee notion," only our ingenious cousin has the ambition of a Frankenstein, having made a steam man who walks upon his own legs, though he works like a horse, or, rather, like three horses. Mr. L. Deddrick, a machinist, of Newark, New Jersey, is the inventor. The man walks or runs in shafts as he is bidden, in any direction, and almost any rate of speed, drawing after him a load the weight of which would tax the strength of three stout draught horses. He stands seven feet nine inches high, the other dimensions of the body being correctly proportioned, and his name is Daniel Lambert. He weighs 500 lbs. Steam is generated in the body or trunk, which is nothing but a three-horse power engine, like those used in our steam fire engines. The legs which support the automaton are complicated and wonderful. The steps are taken very naturally and quite easily. As the body is thrown forward upon the advanced foot, the other is lifted from the ground by a spring, and thrown forward. Each step or pace advances the body two feet, and every revolution of the engine produces four paces. It is proposed to run the engine at the rate of 500 revolutions per minute, which would walk the man at the modest speed of half a mile a minute. The boiler and such parts as are necessarily heated are to be encased in felt or woolen undergarments. The cost of this "first man" is two thousand dollars, though the makers expect to manufacture succeeding ones, warranted to run a year without repair, for three hundred dollars.

A WINDMILL, under the direction of a Syracuse company, has been erected on the Jackson Railroad, at Tangipahoa—the first, so far as we know, ever established in this State. The cost of working it amounts to nothing, and the principle might be successfully applied to the draining and irrigation of lands, as has been done in Holland from time immemorial. It is said that the mill works satisfactorily, though it is doubtful whether the breezes are sufficiently strong in this country.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A New Source of Agricultural Wealth

The cultivation of castor beans is attracting considerable attention at the present time. Heretofore it has been cultivated chiefly for the oil for medicinal purposes, but is now coming largely into demand for other uses. It is being used quite extensively for lubricating, and is an excellent oil for the hair. For medical purposes its use is almost universal.

SELECTION OF SOIL.

Almost any soil that will produce wheat or corn will answer for the castor bean. When it can be had a sandy loam is preferable. The soil should be dry. Wet, heavy soils are not adapted to a successful culture.

One important fact in connection with the culture of castor beans is, that it is one of the most fertilizing crops raised. In this respect it surpasses even clover. Many farmers say, for fertilizing purposes, a crop raised upon land is worth several dollars per acre to the land, on account of the additional fertility gained by it. We have heard of landholders offering the free use of land to be planted with castor beans.

PREPARATION OF THE SOIL.

The ground should be put in good condition for the seed as for other crops. One thorough plowing, and three or four harrowings with a heavy harrow, will be sufficient preparation. Fall plowing is undoubtedly desirable, as it more fully exposes the particles of the soil to the influence of the frosts and the atmosphere, thereby pulverizing it, and preparing it better for the seed. Where a fall plowing has been bestowed upon the land, and another cross-plowing in the spring, thorough harrowing will put it in excellent condition for a heavy crop.

PLANTING THE SEED.

The ground is now laid off in rows, five or six feet apart each way, except that between every sixth and seventh row a distance of about eight feet between the rows is left one way, to admit a horse and wagon or slide to pass, to take the beans when gathered. Hot water, somewhat below the boiling point, should be poured over the seeds and they should remain in this water twenty-four hours before being planted. The temperature of the water will, of course, be gradually reduced to the temperature of the atmosphere. Applying the hot water once will be sufficient. If planted without this preparation, they are a great while in germination, many of them not making their appearance for three or four weeks. With this preparation they will soon germinate and come up regularly. Some farmers put in each hill one-half of those which have hot water poured over them and one-half of those which have not, so that if the cut-worms destroy the first that comes up a stand may be obtained from the others, which will come up a week or two later. Good, sound, plump seed should be selected for planting. A half bushel will plant eight or ten acres. Eight or ten seeds should be dropped in each hill. But one, or at most two, plants are to be left in a hill. As the cutworm is quite destructive to the plants this number of seeds is recommended, so as to be certain of an even stand. Of course replanting can be done; but it is better to avoid it, if possible, by planting plenty of seed. The seed should be planted as soon as all danger of frost is over. The plants are as easily destroyed by frost as our common bean, and, therefore, planting should be delayed till after the first of May.

AFTER CULTURE.

The cultivation of the plants consists in destroying the weeds and grass, and keeping the soil open and mellow. These objects are chiefly attained by using the horse and cultivator, or small plow, working between the rows both ways. After the plant is two feet high it is capable of taking care of itself, and grows rapidly. After heavy rains, however, it is still advisable to work between the rows with the horse cultivator, breaking up the crust that has formed on the surface of the ground, and opening and loosening the soil to derive a greater benefit from the atmosphere. It will be seen that the cultivation is as simple as that of Indian corn, or of the common navy bean.

HARVESTING THE CROP.

About the first day of August the beans begin to ripen. They are produced in pods or husks, on spikes about eighteen inches long, and should be gathered as soon as the pods begin to turn brown, to prevent loss by their popping out on the field, as the beans when ripe pod or burst from the pod quite a distance. They are gathered by cutting off the entire spike. Each plant has a number of these, and they are produced and ripen in succession till frost. Of course, only those exhibiting brown pods should be cut. These spikes are thrown into a wagon or on a slide, passing through the broad rows, and hauled away to the

which is made on a piece of land near the barn field, sloping to the south, so as to get as much heat as possible from the sun to ripen the beans and cause them to burst from the husks. Then roll the ground down hard and make a fence around the yard by placing boards up against rails laid on crotched sticks or posts; though the fence is not necessary if the yard is made large enough to leave a space outside the beans, of twelve or fifteen feet, as many of the beans will pop that distance; and if the fence is not built, or the space left, many of the beans will be lost in the grass or field beyond the yard.

The spikes are occasionally turned over and exposed to the sun, until all the seeds have left the husks, when the old spikes are taken away and a new supply added. The same process is gone through with the entire crop. Great care should be taken to prevent the beans getting wet. Dirty beans command but a small price, and sprouted beans are nearly worthless. When rain is anticipated rake the spikes into a heap and cover them with straw or plank; sweep the beans up, clean them with a fanning mill, and sack them up, store in a dry place. Do not attempt to pop them out in pots over the fire, as it renders them almost worthless.

After the beans begin to ripen the field should be gone over once or twice a week till frost. In hot, dry weather they ripen more rapidly than in cool, wet weather. Children can perform this work, and a large family of children can not be more profitably employed than in taking care of a crop of castor beans. The work is all light. With a steady horse, children might do all the work.

Farmers who raised but a few acres of castor beans will not, of course, go to the expense of fitting up a dry house, as the yard answers the purpose; but farmers who raise fifty acres or more will save labor by having a dry house for dropping out the beans.

FROSTED BEANS

are worth from one-half to two-thirds the price of good beans, but must never be mixed with them when sent to market, as a very few frosted beans in a lot of good will reduce the value very much, from the inability to separate them economically.

YIELD, PRICE, ETC.

The yield will depend much upon the culture bestowed upon the crop, upon the season, and the care exercised in gathering and ripening the seeds. From fifteen to twenty-five bushels to the acre is an average yield. Some cultivators will raise more, others less. Farmers will do well to pay attention to this crop, for which a certain demand exists, and at remunerating cash prices. It will pay better than raising corn, potatoes, wheat, barley or almost any other farm produce. It is not a difficult crop to market—can be taken by team, or sent by river or railroad, with more profit than most crops, as the value is greater for the same quantity.

The crop of 1865 was totally unequal to supply the demand for oil, and prices reached the extraordinary figure of five dollars per bushel. This stimulated the production and importation of foreign oil to such a great extent that the crop and importations the succeeding year (1866) proved more than sufficient to supply the demand, and a small surplus was carried over to the next season. At the commencement of the harvest of 1866 the market opened at three dollars and fifty cents to four dollars per bushel, rapidly declining, however, as the extent of the crop was developed, until at one time sales were made at one dollar and fifty cents per bushel, and advancing later in the season to two dollars and two dollars and twenty-five cents.

Importers of foreign oil suffered heavy losses, and where their stocks were still "in bond" they were forced to ship to Europe for a market.

Prices in 1867 showed remarkable regularity, ranging from two dollars or two dollars and forty cents, with great steadiness during the season.—New York Day Book.

THE Emperor Napoleon always endeavors to combine instruction with the pleasure of the Prince Imperial. On New Year's day he gave the boy a miniature railway, with engine and cars, the track, 500 yards long, being laid on the terrace, running along the reserved gardens of the Tuileries. An engineer is in attendance to explain the engine and run special trains for the Prince's accommodation.

THE battle-field of Montana, where Garibaldi was last defeated, has been purchased by some English Catholics, who propose to build there a church and convent. English gold gave Garibaldi the means to march to Rome, and English gold will be used to commemorate his defeat.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be address? Rev J E C Duremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To supply and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church the Board of Directors, representing in its body as such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God: for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of PARLOR STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 641 and 616 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

There has been rather more activity exhibited in the general market since our last review, though in some departments extreme dullness continues to be the prevailing feature. There is some increase of business in the Western produce market, rather more liberal receipts of corn, flour and pork having afforded a little more scope for operations. In the grocery department, although transactions have not been on a very extensive scale, there has yet been a pretty fair amount of business done, and in the dry goods trade there has been more activity, perhaps, than at any time before during the present season. The stocks of Louisiana sugar and molasses are so much reduced as to necessarily confine transactions to a merely retail business, and the unfavorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, together with inclement weather, have contributed to render the market for our principal staple, cotton, inactive. The news from the interior respecting crop prospects is favorable, considering the many disabilities under which the planters are laboring.

Cotton.—In our last issue we reported the cotton market as having closed in an excited and buoyant condition, with Middling ruling at 30½ to 31c., and very little cotton on sale in first hands. The telegrams from Liverpool on Saturday quoted Middling Orleans at 12¾ to 12⅞d., a further advance, and with large sales, and this news added materially to the excitement already prevailing in our market.—The sales of the day amounted to fully 5,000 bales, at irregular but constantly advancing prices, and they would have been much larger, judging from the willingness manifested to operate, had there been a more ample stock offering. As it was, an advance of about 1½c per lb. was realized on Friday's business, Middling being quoted at 32c. At the opening of business on Monday some few sales were made at prices fully up to Saturday's figures, but the morning dispatches from Liverpool being less favorable, checked operations at once, and the evening telegrams quoting a decline in that market of ⅛ to ¼d. in prices, with a material abatement in the demand, effectually stopped business in this market. Altogether the sales for the day only reached to about 700 bales. On Tuesday there was a general unwillingness to resume business until the receipt of further telegrams from abroad, and these were delayed beyond the usual time from the effects of the storm on the evening and night previous. When the dispatches were received, however, they proved to be extremely unfavorable, as the Liverpool market was reported not only dull, but as having declined also from ⅛ to ¼d. from the highest point reached.—The effect on our market was to suspend business almost entirely. This state of things lasted until after the usual hour for closing business, a few small lots only, scarcely amounting to 100 bales, being sold at irregular but declining prices.—After 3 o'clock 1,000 bales Liverpool Middling were sold at 28⅝. Middling is variously quoted by interested parties from 28½ up to 30 cents.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,800 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 7,733 bales, against 8,920 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 1,187 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 544,421 bales, against 639,444 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 339,197 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 121,007 bales to Great Britain, of 43,150 to France, and of 125,999 to other foreign ports.

Owing to the irregularity of prices, we are compelled to omit our quotations.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 3 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Collier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Collier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Collier can cure any case of Cancer

NATURAL LIBERTY.

We then propose the question, Does the fundamental law of society limit or abridge the natural liberty of mankind? Does any opposition or antagonism exist, in fact, between the just laws of society and the natural rights of men? We have already indicated our opinion in regard to this all-important question. But opinions are nothing. We wish to explode, and blow away forever, the long-entertained, the obstinate, and the almost universally received error on this subject, and establish the truth in its stead, as a point of observation for the contemplation of the clearly defined and unmistakable form of Liberty.

If any natural right be limited or abridged by the laws of society, we may suppose the right of self-defence to be so; since this is the instance which is always selected to illustrate and confirm the reality of such a surrender of our natural liberty. It has, indeed, become a maxim, that when we put on the bonds of civil society we give up the natural right of self-defence.

But what does this maxim mean? Does it mean that we transfer the right to repel force by force? If so, the proposition is not true; for this right is as fully possessed by every individual after he has entered into society as it could have been in a state of nature. If he is assailed, or threatened with immediate personal danger, the law of the land does not require him to wait upon the slow arm of government for protection. On the contrary, it permits him to protect himself, to repel force by force, in so far as this may be necessary to guard against injury to himself; and the law of nature allows no more. Indeed, if there be any difference, the law of the land allows a man to go farther in the defence of self than he is permitted to go by the law of God. Hence, in this sense, the maxim under consideration is not true; and no man's natural liberty is abridged by the State.

Does the maxim mean, then, that in a state of nature every man has a right to redress his own wrongs by the subsequent punishment of the offender, which right the citizen has transferred to the government? It is clear that this must be the meaning if it have any correct meaning at all. But neither in this sense is the maxim or proposition true. The right to punish an offender must rest upon the one or the other of two grounds: either upon the ground that the offender deserves punishment, or that his punishment is necessary to prevent similar offences. Now upon neither of these grounds has any man, even in a state of nature, the right to punish an offence committed against himself.

First, he has no right to punish such an offence on the ground that it deserves punishment. No man has, or ever had, the right to wield the awful attribute of retributive justice; that is, to inflict so much pain for so much guilt or moral turpitude. This is the prerogative of God alone. To His eye all secrets are known, and all degrees of guilt perfectly apparent, and to Him alone belongs the vengeance which is due for moral ill-desert. His law extends over the state of nature as well as over the state of civil society, and calls men to account for their evil deeds. It is evident that in so far as the intrinsic demerit of actions is concerned, it makes no difference whether they be punished here or hereafter. And besides, if the individual had possessed such a right in a state of nature, he has not transferred it to society; for society neither has nor claims any such right. Blackstone but utters the voice of the law when he says: "The end or final cause of human punishment is not by way of atonement or expiation, for that must be left to the just determination of the Supreme Being, but as a precaution against future offences of the same kind." The exercise of retributive justice belongs exclusively to the infallible Ruler of the world, and not to frail, erring man, who himself so greatly stands in need of mercy. Hence, the right to punish a transgressor on the ground that such punishment is deserved has not been transferred from the individual to civil society: first, because he had no such natural right to transfer, and, secondly, because society possesses no such right.

In the second place, if we consider the other ground of punishment, it will likewise appear that the right to punish never belonged to the individual, and consequently could not have been transferred by him to society. For, by the law of nature, the individual has no right to punish an offence against himself in order to prevent future offences of the same kind. If the object of human punishment be, as indeed it is, to prevent the commission of crime, by holding up examples of terror to evil-doers, then it is evidently no more the natural right of the party injured to redress the wrong than it is the right of others. All men are interested in the prevention of wrongs, and hence all men should unite to redress them. All men are endowed by their Creator with a sense of justice, in order to impel them to secure its claims, and throw the shield of its protection around the weak and oppressed. The prevention of wrong, then, is clearly the natural duty, and, consequently, the natural right, of all men.

This duty should be discharged by others, rather than by the party aggrieved. For it is contrary to the law of nature itself that any man should be judge in his own case; that any man should, by any ex post facto decision, determine the amount of punishment due to his enemy, and proceed to inflict it upon him. Such a course, instead of preventing offences, would inevitably promote them; instead of redressing injuries, it would add wrong to wrong; and instead of introducing order, it would only make confusion the worse confounded, and turn the world quite upside down.

On no ground, then, upon which the right to punish may be conceived to rest, does it appear that it was ever possessed, or could ever have been possessed, by the individual. And if the individual never possessed such a right, it is clear that he has never transferred it to society. Hence, this view of the origin of government, however plausible at first sight, or however generally received, has no real foundation in the nature of things. It is purely a creation of the imagination of theorists; one of the phantoms of that manifold, monstrous phantom deity called Liberty, which has been so often invoked by pseudo-philanthropists and reckless reformers to subvert the foundations of society.

The simple truth is, that we are all bound by the law of nature and the law of God to love our neighbor as ourselves. Hence, it is the duty of every man, in a state of nature or without reference to the law of the land, to do all in his power to protect the rights and promote the interests of his fellow-men. It is the duty of all men to consult together, and concert measures for the general good. Right here it is, then, that the law of man, the constitution of civil society, comes into contact with the law of God and rests upon it. Thus, civil society arises, not from a surrender of individual rights, but from a right originally possessed by all; nay, from a solemn duty originally imposed upon all by God himself—a duty which must be performed, whether the individual gives his consent or not. The law of nature itself requires, as we have seen, not only the punishment of the offender, but also that he be punished according to a pre-established law, and by the decision of an impartial tribunal. And in the enactment of such law, as well as in the administration of it, the collective wisdom of society, or its agents, moves in obedience to the law of God, and not in pursuance of rights derived from the individual.

If we will only bear in mind that the orbit, the sphere, of natural liberty is prescribed by the law of nature, or, in other words, the law of God, it will appear perfectly manifest that it is never limited or abridged by any good law of human society. On the contrary, it will be seen that human laws allow a much larger range to the agency of man than is permitted by the moral law of the world.

In regard to the formation of opinions, for example, the law of the land allows the most unbounded liberty, while the divine law sets certain bounds and limits to this freedom of belief. It by no means permits every man to think and believe as he pleases, but holds him responsible for the use of his intellectual powers, and for the rejection of truth. Thus the law of the land, far from being more stringent, is more relaxed, than the law of God, or of pure reason, in regard to freedom of opinion. Human government is, indeed, from its very imperfections, unfit to deal with the great question of freedom of thought; and, therefore, permitting the largest liberty in this respect, she refers the responsibility of man for his opinions to the omniscient and infallible tribunal of Heaven. And in regard to the publication of opinions, or the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press, the laws of man tolerate ten thousand things which are condemned by the law of God; such as deceptions, reckless opinions, and an infinite brood of other falsehoods.

In like manner, if we consider the two great institutions of nature and of civil society, property and marriage, we shall find that the sphere of legal is much larger than that of moral freedom. For numberless marriages are condemned by the law of God, which are permitted, or passed over in silence, by the law of the land; and there is no end to the tricks in trade, to the meanness and extortion, and to the unfair dealings of men about property, which civil government leaves to the great Judge of the quick and the dead. In relation to all the principal duties of life, too, such as charity, and industry, and frugality, and hospitality, and temperance, the law of the land omits to notice an infinity of sins, which are condemned by the moral or divine law. In every direction, in fact, the sphere of civil liberty is much larger than that of natural liberty; that is, according to the very just definition of the latter as given by such jurists and philosophers as Blackstone and Locke. Civil society merely comes to the aid and support of natural law, either to prevent the wrongs by which it is violated, or to enforce the obligations which it imposes. But, in so doing, it does not plant its laws and penalties along the very line marked out by the law of nature. On the contrary, it on all sides incloses a much larger space than that which lies "within the bounds of the law of nature," and is consequently very far from restraining the natural liberty of mankind. It merely plants, indeed, a few safeguards and outposts along and beyond the frontiers of the empire of natural liberty, in order to protect this empire against the wrongs and aggressions of lawless power, or the iron heel of tyranny. Hence the dogma, that civil society is a restraint, or limitation, on the natural rights or liberty of mankind, is one of the inventions of political theorists, which has no foundation in truth, or in the nature of things, and is indeed a seditious libel against every free State under the sun.—Southern Review.

A WONDERFUL MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.—A gentleman in this city recently exhibited the powers of a musical instrument remarkable for its construction and for the almost endless variety of tones produced with it. All the ordinary notes, as heard in conversation or in singing, the cries of different animals, the songs of birds, of many different wind and stringed instruments, were brought out with clearness, and the volume of sound could be increased so as to be heard a quarter of a mile, or in an instant reduced to the gentle sound made by the rustle of a falling leaf. It consisted of a simple tube made of several pieces joined together so that the parts were easily moved by bands and strings attached. Inside the tube were two small, thin slips which vibrated easily, after the manner of a reed in a cabinet organ. The tube was attached to a moderate-sized pair of bellows, so constructed that a small or large quantity of air could be forced from them at the will of the operator. From an examination of the instrument no one would suspect that its power of expression could be so varied. A most interesting part of the performance was where the different feelings and passions of the mind were expressed by the modulations of sound.—Anger, fear, hope, joy, love, and even the more delicate shades of feeling, such as distrust, bashfulness, and vanity, were clearly represented. Fortunately for the enjoyment of the public the instrument is not patented, the inventor having left it open for free use by the public. We understand that several hundreds have already been brought into use in different parts of the country. Any one desiring to know more about it should take pains to cultivate his voice, and he will discover that this wonderful instrument is situated in his own throat. If properly used it will do all we have said, and much more. We think it should be considered all the more valuable because it is so common.—American Agriculturist.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

PROGRESS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.—TESTIMONY OF GEN. SHERMAN.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Senate.—It was elicited from Gen. Thomas that the President's words to him were, "Go and take charge of the War office," instead of "possession" of the War office.

Gen. Sherman—Was here in the middle of December, and had several interviews with the President, two in company with Grant. The managers objected to receiving declarations of the President. Chase said no question had yet been asked.—Stanbery asked, Did the President ask if you would take charge of the War Department on Stanton's removal? Butler objected. Sherman said he had, an interview with the President in Grant's presence, the day Stanton resumed office. Stanbery asked what that interview related to. Butler objected. Stanbery asked, Did the interview relate to Stanton's occupancy of the War office? Sherman—It did. Stanbery—What was the purport of it? Butler objected. Stanbery reduced the question to writing. In that interview what was said about Stanton's return to the War Department? Butler objected. Chase thought the question admissible. Conness appealed—and the yeas and nays were demanded. The matter was at this point discussed very sharply and at great length. Butler interrupted Stanbery repeatedly. Stanbery insisted on his right to say what they intended to prove, and he should go on unless the Senate ordered him to stop. He would prove that the President wanted Sherman to take the War office to secure a judicial decision. Stanbery called on the Chief Justice during the debate to stop Butler's personal aspersions.

Here the court took a recess.

Upon reassembling, Chase repeated his opinion that the question was admissible under yesterday's ruling, because, like that of yesterday, its purpose was to elicit the President's intention. The question was then put and ruled out—23 to 28. Among the Republicans voting with the minority are Sumner, Fessenden, Fowler, Sprague, Van Winkle, Anthony, Grimes, Morgan, Trumbull and Willey. Stanbery asked Sherman what he knew about the Department of the Atlantic.

After discussion the Senate declined to hear the answer without division. Stanbery then asked if the President tendered Sherman the position of Secretary of War ad interim. Butler objected. Senate decided to hear the answer. Answer—The President tendered Sherman the office on two occasions, namely, January 25th and 30th. Stanbery asked if anything else occurred between witness and the President concomitant to the offer when it was first made. Butler objected. Senate refused to hear an answer—23 to 29.

Stanbery asked if the President had in any interview stated his intention, in offering witness the appointment, was to bring the matter before the Supreme Court. Objection. Senate refused to hear an answer—7 to 44. This being regarded a leading question, Stanbery desired to amend it, but was interrupted by the following question by Senator Henderson: "Whether the President, in any interview, had expressed any intention with regard to making the appointment?" The Senate refused to hear an answer—25 to 27.

The counsel for the defence are much chagrined to day at the exclusion of Gen. Sherman's evidence. They struggled manfully, using every art known to law, but were defeated at every turn. They persisted, however, in asking questions after all hope was gone, in order to get questions on the record. So far was this pushed that Butler charged them with pettifogging in order to gain time. Stanbery retorted with dignity, but some anger, claiming that he had practiced many years and was never before accused of trifling with any court, whether high or low.

The managers appeared to have gained their confidence. Butler was almost brilliant with shrewdness, with which he alone fought the combined learning and tact of the counsel. He seemed never at a loss for an argument, a sneer or an impertinence.

Several motions to adjourn were made, on which the ayes and nays were called, the majority desiring to force counsel to cease with Sherman this evening. Counsel evidently at a loss, and after consultation stated that they were through with Sherman for the present, but would ask to be allowed to recall him on Monday. Butler objected, but yielded to Bingham and several Senators, who remonstrated, and the Senate finally adjourned.

The President's friends seem a little discouraged to-night, though the votes excluding testimony were in no case two-thirds, except in the question regarded as a leading one.

GEN. MEADE DISAVOWS THE ARREST OF JUDGE POPE—LIEUTENANT JOHNSON CENSURED.

ATLANTA, April 11.—That there may be fairness in the approaching election, Gen. Meade directs that the ballot boxes shall not be opened or the votes counted, or any information of the progress of the election be given until the polls are closed. After the voting is over the managers shall elect two men of character from opposite parties, who shall be permitted to be present at the counting of the ballots, so as to witness and verify such counting.

ATLANTA, April 11.—The attention of Gen. Meade being called to the course of Lieut. Chas. T. Johnson, 15th Regiment of Infantry, in arresting Judge Pope, of the Circuit Court of Calhoun county, Ala., and closing his court, owing to the difference in construction of orders in reference to empaneling juries. The general commanding publicly declares that this assumption of authority to arrest is deserving of the severest censure.

Meade further says that the object of these orders was not to declare that all juries must be in part composed of colored men, but simply to remove the distinction which the laws of the State in this district made on account of color. The commanding general trusts this disapproval will render subordinate officers cautious to refrain from haste and unauthorized exercise of power vested only in the highest military officers.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Senate.—The motion to amend the rules to allow additional time for speeches was tabled. Stevens, Williams, Boutwell and Logan were disappointed. Stevens and Williams made special appeals for a hearing. Sherman was recalled; Stanbery asked whether, after Stanton's restoration, the good of the service required another man than Stanton at the head of the War Department. Butler objected. Bingham said if Sherman's opinion be given, forty thousand other men's opinions might be called for. Butler spoke at length. He warned the Senators that Saturday's struggle would be renewed to-day.

Several questions were asked by Senators, and a general debate ensued. Mr. Evarts said they desired to show that the President's action was for the good of the service, based on the opinions of honest and intelligent officers. The Senate refused to hear the answer. Yeas only 15. Davis voted nay. Sprague and Saulsbury were absent. Fowler, Grimes, Ross, Trumbull and Van Winkle voted yea. Senator Johnson asked: Did you at any time, and when, before Stanton's removal, advise the President to appoint another person? Butler objected. Chase decided that the question propounded by the Senator could only be objected to by the court. Drake objected, and the Senate refused to hear the answer—18 yeas to 32 nays. Republicans voting yea were Anthony, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Ross, Trumbull and Van Winkle.

The clerk of the District Supreme Court was called, and after a contest the proceedings attending Thomas's arrest were admitted in evidence. Sherman was recalled at the instance of Senator Johnson, who said, "When the President tendered you the office of Secretary of War, on the 20th and 30th of January, state what his purpose in so doing was?" Objection made, but Chase decided the question admissible, as it tended to show the import of the President's action. Chase was sustained by 26 to 25.

Sherman commenced, when Butler interfered, but Sherman thought best to proceed in his own way. The President told Sherman that under the relations of Stanton toward other members of the cabinet, and the President himself, he could not have the War Department administered properly, in the interests of the army and the whole country, while Stanton remained Secretary. In the desire to promote and care for these interests the President tendered Sherman the position of Secretary of War. Sherman asked the President why he did not have the case made up by his lawyers, so as to bring about the change without involving the witness, as an officer of the army, in the matter. The President replied that it couldn't be done; but if it could be brought before the court, Stanton's case wouldn't stand an hour.

Stanbery asked a question, to which Butler objected. Chase ruled that Stanbery could ask relative to the facts elicited by Senator Johnson's question. An appeal and debate ensued, pending which Butler asked whether the question was put by the Senator from Maryland as counsel for the President. Mr. Johnson, from his seat, administered Butler a sharp rebuke. Butler was abashed.

Finally, Sherman proceeded: At the first interview nothing very definite was said by either. During the second, the President desired to have the constitutionality of the tenure of office bill tested. He told Sherman that Stanton would offer no resistance; that Sherman didn't know Stanton as well as the President knew him; that Stanton is a coward. Sherman gave no positive answer. He answered in writing.

Senator Henderson asked, "Did the President on either occasion express firm determination to remove Stanton from office?"

Sherman answered that the President never expressed the determination to use force, but seemed determined their relations should cease.

Senator Howard asked, "What did the President say about force?"

Sherman repeated the President's belief that Stanton would not resist.

Henderson asked whether Sherman gave the President advice.

Senate refused to hear the answer.

The managers summoned Sherman for to-morrow, and he left the stand. The evidence regarding Thomas's arrest was resumed, when the Senate adjourned.

The defense were prepared to prove, had the testimony been admitted, that Sherman advised the formation of and indicated the limits of the Department of the Atlantic.

PROGRESS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Impeachment was continued. Chase ruled out the President's message of the 24th of February. The managers objected to it on general grounds, but Chase rejected it on the ground that the Senate resolutions did not require it, therefore it was not a part of the regular proceedings. The President's message nominating Ewing was admitted. An immense mass of documentary evidence was admitted under continued objections from Butler. The documentary evidence was concluded and the court adjourned.

The Senate ordered certain reports of sessions, and proceeded with the consideration of impeachment and deficiency appropriations. Pending the consideration of these, the $40,000 deficiency in Forney's accounts was discussed. Cameron intimated that Forney's cash was wrongly charged.

House.—Stevens made a statement to the effect that the Senate was determined not to hear impeachers fully, and gave notice that he would move for night sessions in the House, to allow managers and others to make their speeches.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The Herald has a Washington sensation special to the effect that a Radical conspiracy is on foot to extend the term of the President to ten years; to strip the Supreme Court of power to pass upon the constitutionality of any act of Congress; to elect Grant in doubtful States by the bayonet, and unlimited inflation of the currency by means of national banks.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—President Johnson unveiled the statue on the Lincoln monument. Grant was on the sidewalk, having declined to appear on the stand.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The President's counsel had it pretty much their own way this afternoon. The impeachers show palpable signs of discouragement.

PROCESS FOR STAINING WOOD.—Dr. Stolzel adds another to the many receipes already given for staining wood of a brown color. He first of all paints over the wood with a solution made by boiling one part of catechu (cutch or gambir) with thirty parts of water and a little soda. This is allowed to dry in the air, and the wood is painted over with another solution made of one part bichromate of potash and thirty parts of water. By little differences in the mode of treatment, and by varying the strength of the solutions, various shades of color may be given with these materials, which will be permanent and tend to preserve the wood.—Mechanics' Magazine

DYING MARCH.—Damon.

How still and low the silent evening lieth
Upon her early couch of tinted mist,
And ever and anon a west wind sigheth,
A gentle, deep, despairing sigh; and hist!

Now grievously the darkning forest moaneth;
Not loud, but with a moan of constant woe.
The willow leaneth on the oak and groaneth,
And timid shadows wildly come and go.

Now on the cheek of eve the rose-bud faileth;
In beauteous grief she turneth quite away.
Sad lingering in the east the pale moon paleth,
And seemeth, with her face upturned, to pray.

And now the trees, the zephyrs cease their sighing,
The frightened shadows through the darkness flee,
Alone are left, to watch young March adying,
The tearful, silent night and whispering sea.

The woe-struck night, her lustrous eyes o'erflowing
With plenteous tears bedeweth all the plain.
The restless sea, forever coming, going,
Soft singing to himself to hide his pain.

The ghostly hours steal singly to the death-bed,
As favored slaves a dying heir to see;
They slowly come and pass—his latest breath is sped
In one sweet sigh—so toms my death to me:

The April morn will wake upon the morrow,
And start, and stare with vague uncertain fears,
Swim her sweet eyes in undefined sorrow,
And red bestreak her pretty face with tears.

But soon the fickle airs, her grief beguiling,
Will fast forget their sighs of yesterday;
The child, through dewy eyes divinely smiling,
Will join their pranks and sing their roundelay.

The freshening woods will rear her choicest bowers;
The evening linger with her in their shades;
The sunny plains will bring her early flowers;
And spring birds chant her choral serenades.

Only the night will weep beside the willows,
And heaving ocean moan with humbled crest.
The mad-cap boy that wrestled with his billows,
And sank to slumber on his rugged breast.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

TALLADEGA, Ala., March 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my first round on the district, and have but little cause for rejoicing. The financial and political state of the country, together with the vast amount of barbarism practiced throughout this county by incendiarics, have not only spread a gloom over the country, but in many instances roused up an unholy disposition.

I think the church in a much less hopeful condition than during the twelve months past.

Your's in Christ,

JOS. T. CURRY.

P. S.—On the night of the 15th of February my dwelling house, kitchen and smoke house, with nearly all their contents, were destroyed by fire. We saved only a few articles of clothing. My library was a total loss.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

GLENNVILLE, Ala., April 6, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in the ADVOCATE of March 28th an article from Rev. A. Dowling, contalning suggestious concerniug the publication of Confereuce minutes, which seems to be worthy of iudorsement by all our preachers. It is time we were taking steps to discover some plan which will work with less friction and more satisfaction thau have the past arrangemeuts.

I believe it was formerly the custom in our Confereuce to draw upon the missionary and Conference funds for money to defray the expenses of publicatiou. We clearly had no right to this, as it was contributed for other and specific purposes, and at our last scssion the practice ceased, the minutes being published by contributions from the miuisters, all of whose snbsequeut experiences have, perhaps, been of a piece with Brother D.'s. Indeed, for some years past the amounts drawn were so meager that the secretary could ouly furnish an abstract—a small lot of assorted boues, very few and very dry—but little, if any, better than no minutes at all.

If preseuted in a form at all attractive our people would read the minutes with pleasure and profit, and under Brother Dowling's plan there need be no good reason for scarcity of funds. If we expect to have the published minutes of our next session, let esch one bring the names of enough subscribers, accompanied by the cash, to justify our able secretary in giviug us a full report, instead of a compiled mutilation. EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NO. X.—RAPID SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL.

The rapid spread of Christianity over the Roman empire is justly regarded as a powerful evidence of its supernatural origin. The religion of the Jews had been greatly perverted by them from its spiritual character, and their conceptions of the Messianic kingdom grossly materialized. He was to establish the fifth grand and universal empire, more extended, more illustrious and durable than any of its great predecessors. Jerusalem was not only to be the central city of the faith, but the seat of empire, where the Messiah, throned in more than imperial splendor, was to receive the tribute and the homage of a world snbjugated by his power and subject to his authority. Here were to come the kings and illustrious of all lands. Jerusalem was to be filled with splendor and gold, surpassing the gorgeous Oriental magnificence of Solomon the Great. The people of Israel, "God's chosen race," were to share in these glories, and fill the stations of renown, opulence and power. It can easily be seen, from this standpoint, how the "man of sorrows" was likely to be received by the ambitions and sensual rulers of Israel—how his humble parentage, his obscure training, his poor associates, and mean estate would excite unutterable disgust. True, there were holy men and women who could appreciate spiritual excellence, and rejoice in the blessedness of a "kingdom within;" but these were not the governing class, nor the makers and moulders of public opinion. How could a few fishermen, men who belonged to the lowest and poorest class, hope to succeed in preaching a crucified man as the realization of their countrymen's long-cherished and splendid worldly expectations.—Upon any calculations of worldly policy there could be no hope. These apostles were without colleges, libraries, great names, revennes, or anything that in a worldly point of view commands attention, inspires respect or insures success. Then the religion which they preached, in its externals, was devoid of pomp and imposing forms, and was severely simple.

Among the heathen they did not have to encounter the strong current of false preconceptions of the Messiah's kingdom, but they had to breast other currents quite as deep and strong. The minds of the heathen were more materialized than even the mind of Israel. Their gods were all material and local—only men a little amplified and exalted—gods with all the passions and vices of men. Then their priests were part and parcel of the body politic, and supported by the authority and revenues of the State. The worship of these hero gods was celebrated in splendid temples, with rites solemn and impressive, and venerable for their antiquity. Among the most cultivated communities in the cities of the Roman world were various schools of philosophers, puffed up with self-adoration, pride and "science, falsely so called." The gospel was "foolishness" to these men. Its ministers were, in their account, nothing better than "babblers." These men, occupied with unprofitable speculations and hair-splitting subtleties, turned with contempt and disgust from the sub lime simplicity of the gospel. Then the whole world lay "in the wicked one," the victims of unbridled passions. To them the pure and self-denying doctrines of the gospel were anything but congenial and agreeable.

Such, then, is an epitome of the situation as it was at the day of Pentecost, such the state of the Jewish and Gentile world, and such appeared to the eye of reason the apostles and their resources. Humanly speaking, there was not the ghost of a chance for success. Setting aside, for the moment, the supernatural in Christianity, the disciples were the most hopeless fanatics and hair-brained enthusiasts to dream of success against such odds, with such resources.

But see! Fifty days after the resurrection they began the work of preaching a crucified, a risen, an ascended Saviour—began in Jerusalem, where the rulers, "through envy," had delivered Jesus of Nazareth to be crucified—where many were living who clamored for His blood and said: "Crucify him." In this first conflict of spiritual arms, and shock of spiritual forces, "three thousand were cut to the heart," believed, were baptized and added to the church, and in a few days "five thousand more," and perhaps in ten days ten thousand became Christians. The work thus auspiciously begun, continued and spread with ever augmenting power over all Judea, then in Syria, then through Asia Minor, then to Greece, Italy, Gaul and Spain. In forty years, in all the towns and cities of the Roman world, there were scores, hundreds and thousands of Christians.

Consider what prejudices they had to overcome, what educations to abandon, what habits to give up, and what associations to forsake in becoming disciples of the crucified Nazarene. But consider, further, what losses they sustained, what pains they endured. They suffered the loss of good name, for they were a "sect everywhere spoken against;" they were disowned by their families, their goods were "spoiled" and confiscated; they were imprisoned, they were banished, "were tortured, suffering cruel mocking," and multitudes were called to meet a martyr's terrible doom.

How can this be accounted for without allowing Christianity to be more than human—more than "a cunningly-devised fable," or less than the "power of God unto salvation?" There must have been incontestable evidence that Christ rose from the dead. There must have been evidence that He enabled his ministers by supernatural endowment to speak in many tongues the message of life. There must have been clear proof that they possessed from Christ delegated miraculous powers to heal the sick and lame, restore the blind and raise the dead. There must have been proof that the gospel made bad men good — made lions lambs, and the crooked straight. There is no other legitimate solution of this greatest problem on the rolls of time. The promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the ends of the world," was verified, and therefore wonderful works did show forth themselves in these holy men, and believers were more and more added to the church. Upon the hypothesis of the mere human and fraudulent origin of Christianity it ought, upon rational calculations, to have failed. As a mere human contrivance there was nothing in it to make it succeed, and there was everything to defeat it. Its divine origin is the only solution of its success and perpetuity. W.

FLOGGING in the English army and navy owes its decline to the system of making periodical returns of the number of cases, and the names of the officers in command of the regiments and ships in which the cases occurred. The Pall Mall Gazette remarks: "A periodical return of the number of floggings inflicted in our public schools — naming the school in which each punishment was inflicted, and the name of the master who ordered it—would soon rid us of that stain upon our educational system, in which we are an exception to the rest of the civilized world."

THE unfortunate Parisians who hold Maximilian's Mexican loan had a meeting in Paris recently, at which it was stated that the total amount of the loan was $58,283,424 in gold. Unless France assumes this loan, which at present she is very unwilling to do, all this money will be lost.

THE Russian authorities have given approval to the circulation of the Scriptures in Eastern Siberia. The first supply, given by the American Bible Society, is already exhausted, the people are eager for more, and have remitted an order for three thousand copies more.

LETTER from BRITISH HONDURAS.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of several months from my native land I am seated on a log, in this land of fruits, to talk with my old friends through your excellent paper; and, strange as it may seem, surrounded as I am with many things, I scarcely know what to say so as to make it of interest. The gnats bite so hard and fast that gnats seem to be first and last—on my pen and in my face—so that one hand is mostly occupied in fighting the insects. But let me forbear; for some people are so perfectly enthused with this country that they look cross eyed at you if you dare to mention these unrelenting, never-ceasing, and ever-biting little flies. Nevertheless, with your permission I will state a few things in reference to this country, which may not be out of place with some people, and may be of benefit to others.

When I left Louisiana my friends on Bayou Macon asked me to write, and give them facts, without any color or varnish. This I endeavored to do in some private letters, which I learn were published in the Carroll Record. To this I have no objection, for I have said nothing in private that I would not proclaim upon the house top. Hence I propose to give, through your columns, substantially what I have said in private to others.

In many respects this is a goodly land and country—as, for instance, the climate, water and soil. The climate is good anywhere on the coast of the Caribbean sea. But north of Belize, as far as the coast of Yucatan, the land is fine back from the coast, the climate also fine, but the water not so good. South of Belize, as far as the coast of Spanish Honduras, the climate and water are both good, and when you get back from the coast the land gets to be quite good, or it looks good, for it is mostly in the wild forest, covered with dense under-brush, insomuch that it is difficult to know all about it until this "bush" is taken away. But land on the coast has some good points running down the rivers and creeks to within a few miles of the salt water. But this is not so common, for the land on the sea coast is very much mixed in with wire-grass prairies, which stretch along the main, running many miles back, and forming a considerable portion of the coast—half of the colony. In many places this "pine ridge," as they call it, connects with mangrove swamps, which are entirely worthless. In other places the pine ridge (flat) connects with good land, or that that looks good, for a man cannot know so much of this land except he plant such things as are adapted to the climate and soil. For instance, if you come here and plant a garden you will not find out the capacity of the soil, unless you should be more fortunate than your predecessors, at least those of them whom I have had the pleasure of knowing.

We could personate many cases where Americans have attempted to make gardens and have signally failed. And what is more remarkable, we have not met with one success after the sort of gardens we used to see in Louisiana—not one—and I challenge any American for successful contradiction on this point. But when you let these things alone, and turn to those things adapted to this climate, you can live as easily and as cheaply here as in any part of the world. But while the subject is up let me say to those who are disposed to try this land, let them bring money and means enough to do them bountifully for one year; for be assured that you will have need here, as in other places. Once out of money here, you had about as well be in London without friends. A few years ago, however, Americans coming here, and getting short of money, could get help; but generous hearts and full purses have been imposed upon until they are not disposed so kindly as heretofore. Hence, if you wish to come to this land of many fruits, bring some money, and means enough to do you one year at least, for you are coming to a place where it is bad policy to get too low financially. Once down here, and you have a steep hill to climb if you want to get up again. Many people are buoyant with hope of making much money by their farms after a while; and so they may; but it is rather an experiment as yet. But he that plants sugar, coffee, rice, cocoanuts, etc., may succeed, for these things grow to a high degree of perfection. In justice I must say, however, that rice does not yield any more here than I have seen in Louisiana. Corn does grow well, but the yield is rather moderate. Just here some may ask: why, then, have some men spoken of the country as yielding so much more than Louisiana? I suppose that these statements must have reference to sugar cane, or if they do refer to corn, the speaker must hale from the back pine lands, where they make about three shucks and two grains to the hill. For any candid man, that knows anything about it, knows that the alluvial lands of Louisiana are equal to any lands in the world for corn, or anything adapted to that climate. But by telling this I do no wrong to the lands or productions in British Honduras; I only redeem my promise to give facts, without any varnish or coloring, and rather praise the country by making it to compare in those products adapted to the climate and soil of each place. But you spoke of wire grass pine ridge, that was of very little account, and of mangrove swamps. So I did, and they are here. But this land excels in some things; that is, in climate and water this country is as fine as any place in the world. And so far as health is involved, I think this as healthy as any place. The old medical doctrine that warm climates bring on and perpetuate liver diseases does not apply to this place, for I have not known or heard of a case generating here, and every case that I have known or heard of being brought here has found relief in this climate. As to health, no man need fear. But let him not think that he has entered the heavenly city, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more. That place is not here. On the contrary, he will find all these things here, and the wewe's too. Wewe? Yes, a great big ant, that comes in great numbers to your garden, and in a few days the little robbers have its contents carried off and eaten up. "There now, you are giving this country soot," says one just behind me. No, sir; what I have said is true, and if you know anything about it, you know it to be so—aye, you know that I have not told it all. But I have attempted to give facts, pro and con, so that my friends will know better how to balance the good against the bad.

T. J. LACEY.

THE GREAT AIMS OF RELIGION.—Were a man (says Dr. Barrow) designed only, like a fly, to buzz about here for a time, sucking in the air and licking in the dew, then soon to vanish back into nothing, or to be transformed into worms, how sorry and despicable a thing were he! And such, without religion, we should be. But it supplieth us with business of a most worthy nature and lofty importance; it setteth us doing things great and noble as can be; it engageth us to free our minds from all fond conceits, and to cleanse our hearts from all corrupt affections, to curb our brutish appetites, to tame our wild passions, to correct our perverse inclinations, to conform the disposition of our souls and the actions of our lives to the eternal laws of righteousness and goodness. It putteth us upon the imitation of God, and aiming at the resemblance of his perfections; upon obtaining a friendship, and maintaining a correspondence with the high and holy above; upon fitting our minds for conversation and society with the wisest and purest spirits above; upon providing for an immortal state; upon the acquisition of joy and glory everlasting.

TWENTY years ago Melbourne, the capital of Victoria, had a population of 8,000. Its population is now 128,000. In 1848 the province of Otago, one of the nine provinces into which New Zealand is divided, had a population of 620, and in 1864 its population was 61,000. Twenty-three years ago the population of South Australia was 19,000, and in 1866 it was 170,000.

RITUALISTIC CHARITY.

There is no disguising it. To this issue, without doubt or denial, does the matter come. The ritualists may be perfectly sincere; they may be following most conscientiously the light they have, and applying to the best of their ability the principles of Christianity, as they understand them. We are impugning neither their characters nor their motives. What we affirm is, that their logic ties "grace," and, by consequence, salvation, to all within the three denominations specified, be they as ignorant of the word of God, and as grievously devoid of the practical fruits of Christianity as the Hottentots, while all outside these three communions it gives over to reprobation.

It matters not how scriptural may be the creed of Protestant churches, how pure their administration, or how holy their membership, they lack the mark of the true church — Apostolic Succession. — Their ministers are mere laymen, "wells without water," and their benighted flocks are listening from Sabbath to Sabbath to sermons which have no "truth" in them, and receiving sacraments which cannot convey "grace." It matters not, although God may have borne his testimony to these churches by honoring them to suffer for his name, or to spread his truth over the earth, That testimony cannot be accepted in the absence of the one only infallible mark of a true church, the apostolic. The church which in England produced a John Owen and a Richard Baxter in former days, and a Robert Hall and a John Angell James in our own times, is no church in Christ: it lacks the apostolic succession. The church in Scotland, which numbered in its ranks an Andrew Melville and a Samuel Rutherford, and, more lately, an Andrew Thompson and a Thomas Chalmers, is no church of Christ: it lacks the apostolic succession.—These men taught without authority, and "ran unsent." Their pure piety and their fervid zeal, their burning eloquence and their unwearied labors in the cause of the gospel, do not entitle them to rank as ministers of Christ—the hands of Greek or Roman bishop were never laid upon their head. A Schwartz, a Carey, an Alexander Duff, fired with love to Christ, and compassion for perishing souls, go out to India, and, regardless alike of the fever-haunted jungle and the burning sandy plain, the scowling city population and the horrid sights of the idol temple, plant the standard of the Cross, and in the name of Christ take possession of that magnificent continent. A Williams, voyaging toward those latitudes where the Southern Cross nightly emerges from the waves of the vast Pacific, carries the story of redeemed love to the cannibals of the South Sea Islands. A John Eliot and a David Brainerd cross the Atlantic, and there they sleep on their bundle of straw by night, live on the coarsest fare by day, traverse on foot swamps and rocky wildernesses and trackless forests, where the gloom is as that of night—and all for what? To amass gain? to achieve renown? No; to save souls—to preach Christ to the tribes of the Red Man. We might swell the list by hundreds of names. For what sea has not the missionary crossed? what shore has he not visited? Everywhere do we not find his footprints amid the palm-groves of the tropics, and the ice and snow of the Arctic circle? And around these footprints what a verdure springs up? There is seen, in the very heart of the desert, the beauty of Eden. All along, where these blessed feet have passed—through the wasted, blackened wilderness—there lies a track of glory. It needs but to multiply these heralds of mercy, and the whole earth would be clothed with the light of heaven; and the beatific vision which illumines with its celestial splendor the closing pages of the Bible would be realized before the eyes of men.—And such shall one day verily be the aspect of our world. But while we are exulting in the blessed prospect, and read the sure sign of its coming in every new convert and mission field, in steps the ritualist to remind us that our hopes are baseless, and that we commit a great mistake if we suppose for an instant that these men are ministers or missionaries of Christ. Oh, no! cries he, standing up in his painted coat, and speaking to us from the midst of his lighted candles, these men are no missionaries of Christ; they never did, nor never can, convert any one; they lack the apostolic succession.—Christian Times, London.

PREACHER-LIFE.

SHAKE OFF THE DUST OF YOUR FEET.

Where there is a genuine work of the spirit going on the wicked one will be very apt to be working also. That there was a genuine work of the spirit in the revival meeting to which we refer to is even now daily established by the consistent life of many converts.

Almost every one was open to conversation upon religious subjects. One, however, seemed still to be incensed by it. He became greatly offended because I doubted his regarding Christ as his Saviour. Said I: "It is just as improbable that you really and truly regard Christ as your Saviour, and not exemplify it in any of your actions, as it would for you really to believe that you had a comfortable house, and all the conveniences of a home near here, and never go to enjoy the benefits of it." He turned away; but I did not even suspect anything wrong, so innocent was I of any wrong intention.

Returning from Conference, I was told that he was offended. Knowing him to be rather a violent man, the thought came up that may be I had better have nothing more to do with him.—But then he might be overcome by kindness, and, besides, his wife was a member of my church, and a good woman; so I determined not to give him up without another sincere effort, at least.

It was the last evening of the old year—the ground was covered with snow—when I rode up to his house, intending to spend the night. He saluted me with: "You need not be stopping here." "What's the matter, Mr. ——?" said I: "I have done nothing to offend you." "You can go on," he replied: "I don't want any man, who talks to me as you do, about me." "Very well, sir," said I, and, deeply humiliated and sorrowful, yet with no feeling of anger, I sought other shelter.

THOU KNOWEST NOT WHETHER THOU SHALT PROSPER.

Learning that a wealthy planter and his overseer were both lying sick, I determined to go to see them. To both I was a perfect stranger, and only knew that they were both dissipated and wicked men. To the overseer I went first, and found him utterly impervious to the gospel. He indeed seemed to have no respect for it, and not very much more for me. As I met such a reception from the overseer, certainly there would be no use in going to see the employer, who was reputed to be equally as wicked as the other, and who had all the pride of position and wealth to cause him to reject the advances of the circuit rider. "But thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear or whether they will forbear."

Cautiously and doubtingly I introduced the subject of religion: but, to my grateful surprise, no sooner had I remarked that religion would be a very great comfort to him in his present condition than, placing his hands over his face, he burst into a flood of tears, and his whole frame shook with emotion. It was easy for me to weep with those that wept. He ever afterward proved a true friend.

HE THAT BEING OFTEN REPROVED, ETC.

One there was on my first circuit in whom I felt great interest. I visited him, prayed with him and talked with him as best I could. But he manifested a settled opposition to religion, and even forbade his wife's joining the church. As I bade him good-by on my last round before Conference, I held his hand, told him of the interest I had felt in him, and entreated him to reflect on his course. "Oh," said he, "religion will do very well in its way, but I have no use for it."

Just a few days after this a messenger, in great haste, brought me a note from him, entreating me to come, as a man of God, and pray for his little boy, who was at the point of death. My arrangements had all been made to leave the Conference, via home and friends; the boat was expected, but I willingly put off my pleasure and obeyed his summons. In spite of remedies and prayers the little boy, a splendid little fellow of about six years, died. The heart-broken father said that God had taken his child because of his sins, bitterly repented, told his wife that she might join the church, and pledged himself to change his life.

A few weeks after this a brother-in-law, to whom he was warmly attached, died, and on his death-bed warned all his friends to be religious. This awakened him again, and he repeated his vows to become a Christian. But, alas! he kept putting it off, growing more and more careless on the subject, until his old opposition to religion returned. He was waylaid, soon after this, and shot by his own house-servant, and fell off his horse dead, without a moment's warning. As I was summoned to attend his funeral how forcibly the words came up: "He that, being often reproved, hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

AN INHOSPITABLE NIGHT.

A lady who was a member of Rev. Dr. ——'s church, and who had come to her plantation to rusticate, was an occasional attendant upon my ministry. She expressed herself entertained and benefitted, and more than once gave me a very cordial invitation to visit her. Fearing she might think I was slighting her, I concluded to go and spend the night. I seemed to be received with a welcome, but I soon began to feel, without scarcely knowing why, a regret that I had not made my visit in the day-time, instead of to spend the night. Supper came on and bed-time, but there was no proposition to retire. An occasional question from her husband or son, such as: "how far is it to your home?" "are you in the habit of riding at night?" seemed a little strange, but I was utterly unsuspecting until I walked out, about eleven o'clock, and saw my horse still standing hitched up at the gate. Then it flashed over me that I was an unwelcome guest. Indignation at such uncalled-for treatment, as well as an indisposition to leave and go to a friend's house at that time of night, made me resolve that I would stay and see it out. Concluding, I suppose, that there was no getting rid of me, they finally gave me a bed and put up my horse. The lady seemed much ashamed when I met her afterward, and apologized for "that inhospitable night." She need not fear that I am publishing her shame, as I have never told her name to any one, nor have I even told the circumstance before.

A BLOODY END.

Riding along on the levee by a shipping point, one day, a messenger came running to tell me that —— had just been waylaid and shot, and had been taken into the little tavern to die. Of all the reckless characters in that dissolute neighborhood, he was known to be the worst. I hastened to see him, and found him painfully shot with several bullets in the back. He was terribly frightened at the thought of death, called earnestly for forgiveness, and entreated me to pray for him. He became calm very soon when the physician discovered that the wound would not be fatal. He determined to change his life, and asked me to continue my visits. I did so, but found that just in proportion as his prospects of recovery grew more and more certain he had less and less use for religion and the preacher. The old maxim was verified:

"When the devil got sick,
The devil a saint would be;
When the devil got well,
The devil of a saint was he."

His fancied security was soon terribly broken in upon. The same determined, cool-blooded murderer who sought to take his life in the first instance watched his chance, when the attendants had gone out, and went into his room and shot him dead in his bed. His piteous cries for mercy were heard, but all of no avail. He was found weltering in his gore.

The way of the transgressor is hard. C. G. A.

APELLES, THE PAINTER.—The art of painting probably culminated in Apelles, the Titian of his age, who united the rich coloring and sensual charms of the Ionian with the scientific severity of the Sicyonian school. He was contemporaneous with Alexander, and was alone allowed to paint the picture of the great conqueror. He was a native of Ephesus, studied under Pamphilus, of Amphipolis, and when he had gained reputation he went to Sicyon and took lessons from Melanthius. He spent the best part of his life at the courts of Philip and Alexander, and painted many portraits of these great men and of their generals. He excelled in portraits, and labored so assiduously to perfect himself in drawing that he never spent a day without practicing. He made great improvement in the mechanical part of his art, and also was the first who covered his picture with a thin varnish, both to preserve it and bring out the colors. He invented ivory-black. His distinguishing excellence was grace, "that artless balance of motion and repose, springing from character, founded on propriety, which neither falls short of the demands nor overleaps the modesty of nature." His great contemporaries may have equalled him in perspective, accuracy and finish; but he added a grace of conception and refinement of taste which placed him, by the general consent of ancient authors, at the head of all the painters of the world. His greatest work was his Venus Anadyomene, or Venus rising out of the sea, in which female grace was personified. The falling drops of water from her hair form a transparent silver veil over her form. It cost one hundred talents, and was painted for the Temple of Esculapius at Cos, and afterward placed by Augustus in the temple which he dedicated to Julius Cæsar. The lower part of it becoming injured, no one could be found to repair it. Nor was there an artist who could complete an unfinished picture which he left. He was a man who courted criticism, and who was jealous of the fame of rivals. He was a great admirer and friend of Protogenes of Rhodes, who was his equal in finish, but who never knew, as Apelles did, when to cease correcting.—Dr. Lord's Old Roman World.

PRAYING FOR THE POOR.—We are taught in the Bible to pray for the poor, but in the Scriptures a great deal more is said about giving to the poor than about praying for them. Probably no class of people are more frequently remembered in prayer than the congregation of the Lord's poor, and yet it is to be feared that most of those who pray for the poor do but little if anything to supply their wants.

A farmer, whose cribs were full of corn, was accustomed to pray that the wants of the needy might be supplied, but when any one in needy circumstances asked for a little of his corn he said he had none to spare. One day, after hearing his father pray for the poor and the needy, his little son said to him: "Father, I wish I had your corn."

"Why, my son, what would you do with it?" asked the father. The child replied:

"I would answer your prayers."

We can answer our own prayers oftener than we think. With regard to the poor, Jesus says: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." How many answers to prayer depend on our willingness to do good!—Sunday School Times.

THE FARM A SURE ROAD TO SUCCESS.—The main reason that farmers' boys generally make successful men, no matter what pursuit they may follow, is because in boyhood they learn to perform the various duties of the farm, such as plowing, hoeing, planting and reaping. This fits them in their maturer years to accomplish what they undertake. We do not half realize how much the ability to act, caught by the slight early training, influences a whole life. On the other hand, we often greatly over-estimate the value of mere book instruction. It has, of course, great worth, but can never be substituted for training in some pursuit where action is a very important element of instruction.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

TRANSLATED FROM REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

M. Pouchet, director of the Museum of Natural History of Rouen, and correspondent of the Academy of Sciences, has published an illustrated volume under the title of The Universe. It is quite an elementary book, very amusing and very disconnected—a collection of curiosities. "It is in presence of the sea," the author tells us, "and on the beach of Treport, that I have written this book, as a rest for the mind, during a vacation, and, in spite of its elementary form, I believed I ought to put my name at its head." It would have been very difficult for M. Pouchet to enjoy the advantages of an incognito, for it may be guessed that the great matter of spontaneous generations does not hold an insignificant place in the work. This is not, however, a reproach we direct against him; it is on the contrary very fortunate that M. Pouchet should have given a certain development to those subjects in which he finds himself at home. He wished, and, moreover, he tells us so himself, to glean everywhere—to skim the universe; it results that, from seeking for wonders and contrasts, he sometimes falls into the commonplace.

A really interesting part of M. Pouchet's book is that which treats of the architecture of birds. M. Pouchet has had drawn from nature a great number of nests of a very curious construction, which are preserved in the museum of Rouen. The most remarkable of all is the sewing Linnet's (Sylvia sutoria, Latham,) copied from a representation in the possession of the museum of London. This nest is very rare; it is composed of two or three leaves, very long and lanceolated, the edges of which the bird hems carefully together with the aid of a flexible blade of grass which serves as thread. The female afterward fills with cotton the species of little bag formed in this manner, and lays its pretty progeny in this soft bed which the winds cradle. What one would hardly believe is, that birds do not confine themselves always to construct shelters for the protection of their family; there are some, it appears, which sacrifice to luxury, and build for themselves pleasure houses, and groves destined for amorous promenades. The speckled chlamyder, described by Gould, offers us the unexpected example. This is an exotic bird which resembles our partridge; it is distinguished from it by its deep color, relieved by clear spots, and by its neck, which is adorned with a red collar. To construct their nuptial dwelling the couple proceed methodically. For its location they choose an open place, exposed to the sun and to the light. Their first care is to make a path of round pebbles; when they deem it to be sufficiently thick they begin by planting in it a little avenue of branches. They are seen for this purpose to bring from the country slender shoots of trees of about the same size, which they thrust solidly by the thick end into the interstices of the stones. These branches are disposed in two parallel rows, converging a little in such a manner that they form a miniature shrubbery. The plantation is a yard in length, and is sufficiently wide to allow the two birds to walk alongside of each other in the interior. This grove being finished, they devote themselves to embellishing it. They each go foraging in the fields, and bring back all the sparkling objects they can pick up—pearl shells, birds' feathers, all that charms the eye. These trophies are suspended at the entrance to the grove, which soon begins to shine in the sun like a palace of the Arabian Nights. In the places frequented by the chlamyders, if a traveler loses his watch, his knife, his seal, he does not spend his time looking for it on the ground; he knows where to find it. The discovery of these facts appeared so extraordinary to Mr. Gould that he feared to meet in Europe only with unbelievers. To answer beforehand all objections, he had one of these wonderful shrubberies taken up, and succeeded in transporting it to the British Museum, where it can be seen to-day. A little later a living chlamyder was brought to the zoological gardens of London. He was placed in a large room in the midst of all the materials necessary for his constructions; but the poor exile only made a shabby work of it. He scarcely touched the branches, to plant a few here and there in a heap of stones. He wanted the air and the sun; he wanted especially a companion.

Among the facts and reasons which M. Pouchet brings forward in favor of the hypothesis of spontaneous generations, we will mention the following, which are not without weight. There exist, says the author, vegetables which show themselves only in circumstances so exceptional that it is impossible for us to imagine their seeds encumbering the atmosphere during centuries, in order to fertilize, at only rare intervals, some point of the globe. A fungus is known which develops only on the corpses of spiders, another which grows only on the hoofs of horses in a state of decomposition. The isaria has as yet been observed only on certain night butterflies; there are other species which invade the larvæ and chrysalides. Hooker has discovered a fungus which attains considerable dimensions (from 10 to 12 centimetres,) but which is found absolutely only on the neck of a certain caterpillar in tropical countries. It vegetates on the animal, fructifies on it, and the caterpillar buries it with itself in the ground, whence it springs like a funeral plume. Must it be then, says M. Pouchet, that the air has been crammed with seeds in order that one should fall from time to time on a dead spider or on the neck of a caterpillar? As a particular vegetable invades each species of fermentation, it would be equally necessary that the germs of all these microphytes should have floated in atmosphere from the creation till the day a new fermented liquor was invented. Still more, a singular vegetable is known, the racodium cellare, which has never been found except on the casks in wine-cellars, and another which lives only on the drops of soot which the workmen let fall on the soil of mines. Have the seeds of these vegetables remained without use from the origin of the world to the day that they found their proper soil?

ECONOMICAL PRODUCTION OF OXYGEN.—One of the questions at present agitating the chemical world is the economical production of oxygen upon a large scale, and the difficulties attending the solution of the problem demonstrate that however prodigal nature may be of her gifts, she at least reserves to herself the privilege of bestowing them. To M. Bousingault is due the merit of having first carefully investigated the reaction attending the employment of barytes with this object in view, and the method has been experimented upon recently in Paris in connection with the new project for illuminating that city. The properties possessed by barytes, or baryta, which render it serviceable for the production of oxygen, are the facility with which it is converted into the binoxyd, by simply heating it to a dull redness and passing a current of air over it, and also of yielding up the oxygen so acquired when the temperature is pushed to that of a white heat, and undergoing a reconversion from the binoxyd to its original state of protoxyd. In the recent experiments to which we are alluding the tubes of porcelain used by M. Bousingault, and which had the disadvantage of breaking frequently, were replaced by others of wrought iron, and the operator, M. Gondolo, mixed with the baryta a small proportion of alkali, or earth, to render it less liable to sudden disintegration. By the aid of a simple apparatus, and by carefully regulating the temperature, that gentleman obtained, in a quarter of an hour, several cubic yards of the gas at a very small cost, and repeated more than a hundred times in succession the alternate oxydization and disoxydization of the baryta. Practically speaking, there appears scarcely any limit to the repetition of the latter process. A double result is procured from this operation—not only is the oxygen available for the purposes of heating, lighting, feeding blast-furnaces, and in the manufacture of iron and steel, and numerous other processes, but the nitrogen procured from the air and set free in the conversion of the protoxyds of barytes into the binoxyd can also be secured and stored for a variety of uses, such as the preservation of alimentary and cereal articles, and the manufacture and preparation of manures.—The Engineer.

DRAWINGS ON POLISHED AGATE.—The curious figures sometimes found on agate may be imitated by drawing the design with a common goose-quill, wet with a strong solution of nitrate of silver, and exposing it to sunlight. At first the color will be brown, but if retouched two or three times it will become reddish. If the solution contains one-eighth of common soot and one-eighth of bitartrate of potash, it will give a grayish-brown color. A violet color is obtained by substituting alum for the two substances last named. A solution of chloride of gold gives a light-brown color, and nitrate of bismuth white and opaque appearances. These colors are unaffected by the atmosphere; they will reappear after washing when exposed to sunlight.—American Artisan.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

CHOCOLATE.—Take an ounce of chocolate for one person; scrape it and boil it about five minutes, with about four tablespoonfuls of water. When smooth, add a pint of new milk; let it boil, stirring it well; or mull it with a stick or mill, which, passing through the lid of the pot, may be worked quickly with both hands, so as to give a fine froth to the chocolate.

RAGOUT OF COLD NECK OF MUTTON.—Cut the mutton into small chops; trim off the greater portion of the fat; put butter into a stewpan, dredge in a little flour, add two sliced onions, and keep stirring till brown; then put in the meat. When this is quite brown, add water, and a couple of carrots and turnips, each of which should be cut into very thin slices; season with pepper and salt, and stow till quite tender, which will be in about three-quarters of an hour.

ONIONS.—Select the white kind, peel and put them in boiling milk, little salted, boil from half to three-quarters of an hour. Sometimes I use water first, pour off when half done, then put in boiling milk. Drain in a colendar if you wish them dry, otherwise leave some of the milk, add butter and pepper, and serve.

DRY PEA SOUP.—Soak the peas over night. Put a pound and a half of split peas into four quarts of water, with roast beef or mutton bones, and a ham bone or slices of ham. Add two heads of celery and two onions, and stew slowly till the peas are soft. Then strain the peas through a coarse sieve, and put them back and season to your taste with pepper and salt. Let it boil one hour longer. When you have no celery, use a teaspoonful of essence of celery or a spoonful of celery vinegar.

HOW TO KEEP FRESH MEAT.—Steak (pork and beef), sausages, puddings, etc., can be kept fresh the "year round," by frying and seasoning when fresh, the same as for the table, packing down in crocks or lard cans, and pouring hot lard over them, covering about one inch. When needed, scrape off the lard and heat through. This is valuable information to farmers and others, who kill a beef and dispose of a portion at a low rate, and then are unable to procure fresh meat during the summer. Those who have adopted this plan assert that it is impossible to detect any difference between the preserved and the recently prepared meats.

COLORING FOR CONFECTIONERY.—To color almonds or sugar grains, for cakes or pastry, you must blanch, dry and chop them rather coarsely; pour a little prepared cochineal into the hands, and roll the almonds between them until they are equally colored; then spread them on a sheet of paper, and place them in a very gentle degree of heat to dry. Use spinach juice to color them green, and a strong infusion of saffron to give them a yellow tint. They have a pretty effect when strewed over the icing of tarts or cake, especially the rose-colored ones, which should be rather pale. The sugar is prepared in the same manner, after being first broken into lumps, and then, with the end of a paste roller, into grains about the size of a pea; but unless it be dry and hard, and carefully done, it will absorb too much of the cochineal.

A SPLENDID MEAT PIE.—For the crust weigh out two pounds of flour and sift it; then three-quarters of a pound of lard, and rub into the flour until there are no lumps. Add two heaping spoonfuls of salt and two medium-sized tumblers of water. Mix up and roll out about a third of an inch thick. Rub a large pudding dish with lard. Line it with the pie crust, letting it come well over the edge, that it may not melt down into the bottom of the dish. Roll out another crust, and turning a flat tin cover, about the size of the top of the pudding dish, upside down, cover that with the crust, and if you choose ornament it with a wreath of leaves out out of the crust. Set this on some pieces of brick if the handle is in the way. Also line a large pie plate with another crust. Bake these all a light brown. For the body, take some beef, veal or chickens, rub with salt and a little pepper, cut into pieces, put into a kettle with cold water, cover closely and stew one hour. This being done, take a half teacupful of flour or corn starch. Pour in gradually a half teacup of water and stir it smooth. Pour it into the kettle of boiling meat and gravy, and stir it three or four minutes. Then dip out the meat and gravy into the pudding dish until it is half full. Lay in the crust from the pie plate. Fill up the dish with the meat and gravy and lay on the ornamented cover. Supposing that the vegetables were put on at the same time that the meat was, your dinner will probably be all ready together.

GLAZING THE CIRCUIT.

MONTGOMERY CONF., April 10, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I want a revival in my church, and am unwilling to leave any means untried to effect so desirable an object. If "glazing the church" will do it I will go about putting in the lights to-day. So you will please send the ADVOCATE to the parties whose names I send, trusting to send you money next week. Hope this is but a beginning.

I am not at all surprised to hear, through your columns, that Brother Campbell, in Selma, is having a glorious revival. Why, sir, forty-five subscribers in one lot is enough of itself to revive almost any church. Your paper helps me to preach. Why should it not help my people to hear?

I fear we people and preachers of the Montgomery Conference have been remiss in efforts for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, but if large subscriptions will do for all of us what is now being done for Brother Campbell, we could not only afford, but would be anxious to double and treble. C.

EXPANDING THE LUNGS.—Step out into the purest air you can find; stand perfectly erect, with head and shoulders back, and then, fixing your lips as though you were going to whistle, draw the air through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full, gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended, with the palms of the hands down, as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as they are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after gently forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you draw your breath until the lungs are empty. This process should be repeated three or four times immediately after bathing, and several times through the day. It is impossible to describe to one who has never tried it the glorious sense of vigor which follows the exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world. We know a gentleman the measure of whose chest has been increased by this means some three or four inches during many months.

METHODIST SINGING.

One of the grand marks of Methodism is its singing. It can proudly boast of its own hymns, and, without using the verses of any other than Methodist composers, might claim to have the richest and most spiritual psalmody of any branch of the Christian church. If we can conceive for a moment of the dependent condition of a church without any poetical inspiration of its own, we may know how to be grateful enough for the gift of a man who has put the peculiar theology of our church in numbers, and adapted the fervid faith of Methodism to the unanimity of song.

The importance of giving united expression to the sentiments of an audience cannot be overstated. Without this power an audience is but a small part of itself. Imagine the rescued host of Israel standing upon the shores of the Red sea, looking down upon the gulfs passed, and the struggling, sinking chariots of Pharaoh, without the song of Moses or the tymbrel of Miriam, or the antistrophe of the women, "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea!" Or how, amid the voice of a great thunder and the voice of many waters, shall the hundred and forty and four thousand be heard without the voice of their harps! The utterance of a great multitude without numbers and song is only confused sound. This is attempted in the responses of the Episcopal church, and the result is a helter-skelter noise, unintelligible, excepting as they may be distinctly gathered from some one lagging behind. Speaking voices cannot pronounce simultaneously; it is only by the singing voice that this can be done. All great utterances, therefore, of men must be through the medium of song. The one thought possessing a multitude can be uttered intelligibly in the measured vibrations of harmonious sound. And if all would speak, this is the only way they can speak so as to be understood.

The sentiment itself grows by its expression in song, for every additional voice increases the power of the utterance by the clear contribution of its own sentiment. It is terrible to contemplate the growing power of the Apocalyptic ascription, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." These few words are uttered first by the four and twenty elders and by the four living organs next the throne; then they are taken up and the stream of sound is swollen by many angels—the number of them ten thousand times ten thousand; and then every creature in heaven and earth, and under the earth, and in the sea—the whole universe of intelligences—utters the same sentiment in the rolling, growing thunder of angelic song. It is in this way that numbers glorify God, and it is in such a universe of holy harmony that God delights to dwell; this is, so to speak, the heaven of the Highest One—"O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel!"

Amid the outpouring of many voices the individual is borne upon the tide of song, and his soul yields itself to the inspiring joy, satisfied with a better and infinitely fuller expression than its own. This power of expression becomes to him as the power of thought, and for the time all his thought yields itself to the expression. This wondrous capacity of the ear and the voice for combining the sentiment of a multitude, and arresting for the time its thought upon one point, has ever been used by the inspired direction of God for leading and controlling the worship of his sanctuary. And lame, and partial, and feeble indeed are the services of God's house if attempted without hymns and spiritual songs. Devotion becomes straggling, inspiration expires for want of adequate expression, the unity of the spirit is missed, the contribution of each does not strengthen the whole, and the soul fails to be increased and multiplied by the abounding joy of the Lord's people, because it sits solitary. The psalms of David were directed to Asaph. His inspired skill as the musician of the temple was necessary to combine its worshiping throngs in adequately expressing those lofty lyrics; and without Asaph we know not the full glory of the divine psalms.

Mr. Wesley and his brother gave great attention to the science of music and to church psalmody. The men were trained, the women and the children. Books were printed with hymns on one page and notes on the opposite. The hymns of the Wesleyans, and the melodions, lively style in which they were rendered, did full as much as their preaching. That is, the Holy Spirit was present, and their songs told the glory of that presence with surpassing power. The people crowded to hear the joyful sound of the singing and the sermon. Methodism was a religion of joy and therefore of song. It still retains, to a great degree, this characteristic. But in some parts of our work music seems to have fled from the house of God; mainly, we think, because both preachers and people have not regarded it as an essential and permanent part of the employment of God's church. We need a revival of the work of God just at this point. It is the duty as well as the delight of a good man to "sing praises." If he cannot sing, he waits under the altar for that blessed part of heaven, the power of uniting in the songs of Zion, and we think that Methodism without good singing is but half-Methodism. The Episcopal church is setting us in this a good example. She is sending men to teach singing gratis, wherever a company of the young can be gathered; they are instructed and interested in the church, and thus the precentor accomplishes the work of a preacher. Let us do likewise—discover the latent talent and employ it in this most delightful mission of teaching youth to sing the praises of God.

THE INTERESTS OF THE WEST AND SOUTH.—We copy as follows from the St. Louis Times of the 12th:

The interests of the West and South are identical. Natural friends, they never should have been enemies. The wealth of both lies in their soil. Agriculture is the common mine from which they have dug the wealth and forged the implements of progress that have made the United States the wonder of the world. And yet they had scarcely entered upon their career when war entered upon its work of devastation. A mock or foolish philanthropy having arrayed the sections in arms against each other, and with fire and sword destroyed the weaker half, seeks now to shackle the West with the chains of commercial bondage.

Through the instrumentality of tariffs and class legislation millions are drawn from the West and South to support Eastern manufacturing interests, which, if they cannot live without it, should be allowed to disappear from the continent.

It is as true of States as it is of families that they should not buy from each other that which a third party, even though it be a foreign nation, can produce cheaper than themselves.—If the fertility of our soil and the geniality of our climate are such as to offer greater rewards to labor than the barren and exhausted fields of Europe, may we not be allowed to profit by the fact? Why drive, by legislation, the industry of our country into channels where the advantage all rests with our competitors? It is as unwise as it is unjust. It is the policy of New England to make tributary the South and West, and it is to this determination that is attributable the failure on the part of the present Congress, whose action is entirely in the interest of the manufacturers and bondholders, to take any steps to reduce the public debt, which is, and must remain the pretext for this system of legislation. We shall have justice after a while and relief, or the bond paper on which the evidence of the government's indebtedness is written will not be worth what it costs to make the impression.

THERE is now good reason to believe that before the summer of 1869 a continuous connected line of telegraphs will be established between England and her Indian possessions.

THE bridge now being built by the Union Pacific Railroad Company over Dale Creek, west of Cheyenne, is nearly 2,000 feet long and over 110 feet high.

CHARITY.

Generally it may be regarded as a suspicious and dangerous symptom when this subject is associated with casuistical definitions and distinctions. It is an effort to vindicate our possession, when, if we really possessed it, no such effort would be required. It is a further suspicious circumstance that the chief difficulty lies in love to our neighbor, rather than in love to God. To love God with all the heart is probably more difficult than to love "thy neighbor as thyself;" and yet many are in perpetual entanglement and perplexity about the latter, while the former seems to give them but little uneasiness. There is a forced effort to adjust and harmonize our lives and tempers with charity, when there is little or no genuine love in us.

In most cases it is an endeavor to justify malign and selfish feelings, and to persuade ourselves that they are sanctified passions. There is an eager haste in taking hold of inspired imprecations, such as may be found in some of David's psalms, and a pause of delighted satisfaction over any passage that seems to countenance the indulgence of anger, or to commend the entertainment of vindictive sentiments. Christ was angry at least on one occasion, and we are admonished by an apostle to be angry "and sin not." To many souls there is dangerous comfort in such Scriptures; and too often they are wrested to the spiritual damage of those who are seeking to make out a case of charity where none exists.

In the absence of vindictive feelings men are sometimes prone to mistake mere indifference for that grace without which they are "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." They are not conscious of hating anybody; they have harmed no one; they bear no malice. But is there any love in all this? There is no ill will, possibly because our pride and selfishness have not been invaded, and because no conflict of interest has been excited. Indifference toward God and toward man, the supposed absence of enmity and malevolence, is the standard of confession and attainment. It is this sort of peace in which many profess to live, and in which they die. If the tree is known by its fruits, there is nothing here to determine that the character is good. Natural temperament and peculiar outward circumstances may account for evenness and harmony in our relations with others; and the fact that we take no interest in them is often in itself a sufficient explanation. Indifference certainly is not love, and victory over it is love's first conquest. It is here that charity begins, where the natural affections are left behind, and selfishness gives way to an active and gushing flood of interest and sympathy for our kind. Not to hate is nothing: we must love.

When we pass from the regions of indifference we find ourselves involved in something more than passive antagonism to charity. Self-deception is also here, and counterfeits of the genuine article. There are the degraded and vile with whom we are not brought in personal contact; but we must know of them and think about them. There are those whom we know to be inexcusable in their shame and crimes. Here is something greater than moral esteem, if we have reached it, even the love of sinners.

The last and highest test is to love our enemies. In the enemies of God we do not find the same trial. When the enmity is directed against ourselves, in malicious damage to character or person, then we begin to seek some pretence for the abatement of charity. To hate others and to injure them is just as bad as to hate and injure us; and to hate God, to dishonor Him and to blaspheme his name, is much worse. But still we find it harder to love our personal enemies than to love the enemies of God. This shows how much pride and selfishness there is in what we may choose to call Christ-like anger and righteous indignation. If self were not mixed up in the matter, there would be but slight temptation to indulge in a vindictive spirit. Suppose charity to be something which takes pride and selfishness out of us, what then becomes of the revenge which they have excited?

Relief is sometimes sought in the fact that forgiveness of injuries is not indiscriminate and unconditional. The offender must repent and reform. That is, actual forgiveness is something to be accepted as well as bestowed, and the consent of both parties is necessary. But how does this help us in the point at issue? The forgiving spirit must exist toward the most malicious, though actual forgiveness may be not a moral, but a natural impossibility. The forgiving act is a small matter in comparison with the forgiving spirit, which we are at all times bound to cherish. He who finds relief in the conditions upon which injuries are to be forgiven deceives himself; because love to our enemies is higher, absolutely required in all cases, and embraces forgiveness as one of its fruits, whenever occasion offers.

Neither are we to escape the difficulty by confounding love with its fruits. We may be able to feed our enemy and give him drink, at the same time that we have no love for him. Love would lead us to do this, but we may do it without love; and we may do it heartily because there is no love. There are many ways and different senses in which we may seek to pour coals of fire upon our enemy's head.

God himself is our example in love. In this we are to be perfect, even as our Father in heaven is perfect. If we have charity, sin will only deepen and intensify our love; and the purest and loftiest flame is that which embraces the vilest and most malignant in its folds. This is the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and which the believing heart is to know. The divine benevolence achieved its highest result when it overflowed the bounds of angelic purity, and poured its tide upon a race of enemies and sinners. We come nearest to God when sin and hate, and malice, deepen our compassion, and draw our sympathies and affections out after the erring and fallen.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE MASSACRE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW, preceded by a History of the Religious Wars in the reign of Charles IX, by Henry White. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868. pp. 489, 8vo. For sale by Geo. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

The atrocities of the 16th century, culminating in the massacre at Paris, have had many historians. The scenes of that fearful night have been portrayed with all the light which time could throw upon it. But every year discloses and opens new sources of information as the industry of the student penetrates hidden recesses and brings forth official papers and private letters which have heretofore escaped public search. This work contributes largely to the general information from the Medicis MSS. at Le Puy, the manuscripts in the public library at Rouen, the letters of Charles IX at Tours, the public records of Montpelier, Nismes, Grenoble, etc., the unpublished memoirs of Jacques Gaches, and other sources too numerous to recite here. The work is thorough, and evidences labor, capacity and opportunity in a high degree. It reproduces the minutest features of that bloody drama; and in the description of the events which preceded it, and in the estimate of the characters of the important persons who were actors in it, the author displays singular ability, and weighs with nice care conflicting evidence, holding an even balance. The interest of the work never flags, for apart from the intense substance of it, the style is captivating in a high degree and characterized by singular ease, vivacity, moderation, and that force which comes from a full mind and a complete mastery of its theme.

The type, paper and the outside of the book are delightful—all that could be desired. We shall publish extracts from its rich pages, from time to time, in the ADVOCATE.

A SMALLER HISTORY OF ENGLAND, from the earliest times to the year 1862. Edited by William Smith, LL.D. New York: Harper & Bros., 1868. 12mo. pp. 357. For sale by Geo. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee, New Orleans. This is one of a series of Histories for Students which have been republished in this country by the Messrs. Harper. It is intended for the use of the lower forms in schools. The condensation of the work is very great, but it is not all bone, as epitomes usually are. It has flesh and blood, and a natural covering enough to make it very readable, as well as very instructive. The tables and index at the end of the volume are models of arrangement and completeness. It comes down to the majority of the present Prince of Wales, which includes the last drop of the modern history of England. Its pages are enlivened with woodcuts. On the whole it furnishes information for schools just in the form we find best adapted to our own instruction, requiring but little time to read, and touching with sufficient distinctness upon all those great items and turning points of national development which make up history.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

GREENSBORO', Ala., April 8, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The Board of Trustees of the Southern University, at a meeting held on the 31st March, unanimously passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That Rev. S. P. Richardson be and is hereby appointed agent of the Southern University, to act, as far as consistent with his duties as Bible Agent, in soliciting patronage, collecting funds, and in bringing the claims of the institution fully before the public, and that we earnestly request the preachers and friends of the church to aid and co-operate with him.

The secretary was requested to furnish a copy of this resolution to the church papers for publication.

Mr. Richardson, who is an earnest friend to the educational interests of the South, without regard to church affinities, proposes, as far as his connection with the American Bible Society will permit, to bring the University and its interests prominently before the church and people of our State, and should receive the cordial support and co-operation of every friend of the institution.

Your's truly,
JAMES J. GARRETT,
Secretary pro tem.

For the Advocate.

PERSONAL.

NEW ORLEANS, April 13, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: These are times that "try men's souls." In common with my brothers who have given their lives to the itinerant ministry, and laid aside nothing, I feel most acutely the pressure that is upon us as a class. At the last session of the Mississippi Conference I was reappointed to a circuit that was unable to support me the year before. On returning to the circuit I found the people less inclined, if not less able, to provide for the support of a preacher, and I have been compelled to seek a home and support for my family elsewhere. The kindness of friends, and, I trust, the providence of God, has fixed my lot for the present in New Orleans. I am now laboring with my own hands for my daily bread. I expect to preach as opportunity offers, and try to be useful. It is a day of sore trial, indeed, to one who has spent nearly thirty years in the ministry to be forced now to secular pursuits. But the ways of God are past finding out. I believe firmly that He is in everything. Like thousands, I labor under the embarrassments of poverty. But with God's help I shall put forth earnest effort, and hope to succeed at least in securing a livelihood.

ADDRESS OF REV. HEMAN BANGS.

At a reunion of the New York and the New York East Conferences, held in St. Paul's Church, among many speeches we note the following:

ADDRESS OF REV. HEMAN BANGS.

I ought to be excused from speaking. I am all alone. I have nobody with me. I have not a single man with me on the right hand or the left—not one. Here are three men older in the ministry than myself, and before me are a great many younger. But I am here alone, the only effective minister left of the old New York Conference when I joined it. I believe that there is one other living to-day, Dr. Samuel Luckey. I don't think I ought to make a speech. I ought to stand here and let you look at me. (Laughter.) I can't get under way in fifteen minutes, (laughter) cannot get fairly warmed up. Well, I might as well tell my experience as anything else.

I first found the Lord in 1800, sixty-eight years ago. I joined the church in 1808. It was something to be a Methodist then. My parents did not like them very well, and they were not willing, as I was a lad, that I should join, and I did not join until some time afterward. How many Methodists do you think there were then in the United States of America? One hundred and fifty-one thousand in the whole connection. There are more Methodist ministers to-day on this floor than there were in the connection at that time.

In 1815 I joined the old New York Conference, extending then from New York to Quebec. All the Canadas have been cut off; since, the Troy Conference, and part of Oneida, and then we are divided into two. I have received and filled fifty-three appointments since then. I stood one year supernumerary on the minutes, and then I had charge of a large church, and preached all the year, (laughter,) with the exception of a month or two. I have attended every conference since I joined. I have never missed a conference, and never missed being there when it opened, nor neglected a day in my life. I have been stationed twenty-five years in cities. They have made such a kind of presiding elder as I am, and have been such for seventeen years. I have traveled nine circuits, and have been in the agency of the university to get up a college for the boys here. (Laughter.) You would not have it, I reckon, if I had not done it, and we should not have had you here. I spent two years in getting it up, and that makes the fifty-three years. Well, I finished up my fifty-third last Sabbath with three sermons, one love-feast, one sacrament, without any help, two quarterly conferences, and a ride of fourteen miles, and eight of them in a buggy without any back to the seat. (Applause and laughter.) I was able to be up at four o'clock Monday morning, and took the stage and rode eleven miles, took the cars and traveled one hundred and twenty-two miles up to Tuesday. I then started for this conference, and I am here to-day just as fresh for battle as I ever was in my life. (Applause.) Now I said I had better not speak, but to stand here and let you look at me. I am a monument of God's grace and mercy. I do not understand it. I do not understand myself. God has put the machinery here in motion, and he keeps it in motion, and for what purpose I do not know, but I suppose it is right to keep it going as long as it is oiled up well.

I sometimes think that I ought to step out of the way, and let some of these younger and learned men take my place. I have been afraid sometimes that I have blocked up the way, whether I go as presiding elder, or preacher, or class leader. If I go out of the active traveling ministry I am going into the Sabbath school and teach an infant class if I live. (Laughter.) Long ago I gave all I am and all I have to God, and never took it back. I believe there is a heaven. God has blessed me wonderfully. I was looking over a little record, and I find in connection with my colleagues we have taken on the circuits and stations where we have been, ten thousand persons into the church. (Turning to Brother Richardson,) We had thirteen hundred converted and joined the church in this city in one year. In two years about twenty-one hundred.

Now I am free to-day by the grace of God. I am free from envy, from jealousy, and, by the grace of God, free from the love of the world. I do not begrudge any man his money, nor his popularity, nor his influence, nor his standing in society, nor anything else. Now go ahead as fast as you can. (Laughter.) You may out-top me, you may run over me if you have a mind to. I shall not put one single block in your course. Go on, go on. I don't care how much learning you get, or how much applause you get, or how much you do. I shall rejoice in it all. I was brought up in the woods, and could not go to school, but felt the need of education and learning, and I said my children shall not labor under the disadvantages I have had if I can possibly avoid it. I got a thousand dollars one day by a patch on my coat. I was pleading for the university. I said I am determined my children shall have an education if I have to wear a patched coat, and in that way they gave me a thousand dollars, and I thank God that my children have been educated, and other men's children too, and I rejoice in it. But I hope we shall attend to Father Clark's admonition. We want the force, but we must not lose the power. I am happy, and I hope to live in glory. My wife has gone up since we parted conferences, and six of my children are there, and four more on their journey.

There are now, I believe, but five persons living that helped to form the old New York Conference when I joined, only five of them living, and here are two of them. Brother Luckey is one, and Theodosius Clark is another. If I live two or three years longer I shall begin to be an old man. I don't trouble myself about it. I don't trouble myself about to-morrow. I live happy to-day and let to-morrow take care of itself. The reverend gentleman closed with God's blessing on all.

EMIGRANT AID SOCIETY IN SELMA.—The Selma Chamber of Commerce at a recent meeting adopted the following:

1. That an Emigrant-Aid society be formed for the furtherance of these ends, to be managed by those whose characters would be a guaranty of the fidelity of transactions; and that this Chamber of Commerce extend its fostering care to said society.

2. That one officer of this society shall be a salaried officer, whose duties it shall be to keep an office for the transaction of the business of the society, obtain all needed information to enable the agent of colonization to locate colonies to advantage, and to aid the colonists in all other possible ways, and that this officer shall be paid or allowed a per centum on all sales of land, to be paid by the selling party.

3. That as the Rev. Mr. Von Raalte thinks it best to make his abode in the South, that he may "show his faith by his works," and thereby the better succeed in inducing immigration here, this society pay a pro rata per centum of proceeds for sales on lands, and of other proceeds, with other like societies, for his support.

4. That two colonies be formed on the railroads now leading into Selma; one on the S. R. and D. R. R., looking to mineral developments, and the other on the S. and M. R. R., looking to agricultural pursuits.

5. That this society obtain, as soon as practicable, lands for the locations of those colonies, including analyses of any valuable minerals on or near them; and that these lands be placed in such shape that the colonists may feel that there is no risk or uncertainty in their coming.

MARRIED.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

AUBURN, Alabama, April 9, 1868.

At a called meeting of the Board of Trustees of East Alabama College, Auburn, Rev. M. S. Andrews offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from this world our much-esteemed brother, C. Raiford, who has been an active official member of this board ever since its organization, a man of sterling integrity, firm Christian purpose and great usefulness;

AND WHEREAS, In his death the East Alabama College, the church and the community have sustained no ordinary loss, we deem it due to the memory of the deceased, and to the feeling of the community, that a suitable expression of sentiment should be made by this board; therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow with meek submission to the will of God in this sad dispensation, we will ever cherish with grateful affection the memory of our deceased brother.

Resolved, That we tender to the family of Brother Raiford assurances of our deepest sorrow, and sincerest sympathy and condolence with them in their sad bereavement, and that we unite our prayers to our Heavenly Father that he will most mercifully visit them with his comforting and sustaining grace.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Southern Christian Advocate, that they be spread upon the minutes of the board, and a copy of them be furnished the family of the deceased.

E. J. HAMILL,
Secretary of the Board.

REV. JAMES B. JACKSON.

This faithful servant of God died at the town of Baldwin, in Florida, on the 18th of February, 1868. He was the presiding elder in the Jacksonville district. His death was the result of an accident, being crushed between the cars and the platform in attempting to get upon the cars when in motion. Thus in the performance of his duty and in the midst of his days he was cut down. If long life and good days were the lot of the righteous on the earth, it would be difficult for those who knew him to reconcile this sad dispensation toward our brother with the love of God to his people. But, happily, those who are best acquainted with the teachings of Scripture know well enough that the rewards of the righteous are not to be realized in this life, as the kingdom of Christ is not of this world. In the scheme of redemption it cannot be that temporal blessings and prosperity should be the gauge and measure of one's piety or the end of the Christian's hope and trust. The apostle tells us that we must walk by faith, not by sight, and that this present life is but a place and state of probation, where the faith of the Christian is tried as by fire. As Christ suffered, so must we suffer. We have our crosses to bear, and whilst we are passing through the furnace of affliction it is given unto us to look forward to that amazing wealth of inheritance which awaits us with the saints in light. Brother Jackson passed away in the prime of life and in the vigor of health. But he was on the watch as a faithful steward after his Master's work and awaiting his Lord's coming, and his Lord came and found him watching and ready, and took him and gave him his reward. We who are left behind to hope and to fear, to sigh and to struggle, may well lift up our hearts and our voices in humble praises to God that this land of sorrow and change is not our abiding place nor our inheritance, but that there is a land of pure delight, where Christ forever reigns, and that there the faithful Christian will go to him and be with him and like him.

In the year 1863-4 the writer and his family were resident refugees in the town of Thomasville, Georgia. Brother Jackson was the stationed pastor. There first began our acquaintance and friendship, which continued until the curtain of death dropped between us. The simplicity of his character and life blended so harmoniously with his piety and faith that no one who knew him as I did could doubt the sincerity and purity of his love to the gospel he preached. I remember him well—his fine manly person, his sweetness of temper, his humility, his resignation to hardships and poverty, his abiding trust in God. He labored to make an insufficient support by working with his own hands. He did it uncomplainingly, and bore his share of the troubles of that day as became a Christian and a gentleman. In the autumn of 1864 Conference sent him to Quincy, Florida. We parted then never to meet again. After my return to the city, and some eighteen months after we separated, he wrote to me, and amongst other things remarked that he had received but $45 in money for his pastoral services. I do not repeat this to reproach the people whom he served and to whom he preached. The people were poor then, and if any fell short of his duty in the support of his pastor and his family let the mantle of charity cover it. I refer to it only to add one more name to the record of that noble army who have suffered the loss of all things for Christ. Methodist preachers who read this, and who know what it is to suffer, will not perhaps regard the self-denials and unpaid labors of our sainted brother as anything new or strange in the history of a Methodist preacher. We know and they know that it is the rule rather than the exception. But to the unthinking and worldly the lesson is something, the example is something. Let it be told to them, that they may see and know how the name of our Lord and Master has been glorified in the earth by the lives and deaths of these sainted men. In comparison with the hope and faith of the dying Christian, how empty the mere teachings of philosophy, how vain the dreams of philosophers, what baubles the pomp and pride of power, of wealth and the wisdom of this world! Let the worn and weary laborer in Christ's vineyard be faithful to the end. Let the ragged beggar at the gate of Dives, poor in wealth but rich in faith, hold up his head, for henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness, and a whiter robe than ever Dives wore. May the God of the widow and the orphan be the friend of the widow and the orphans of our deceased brother, and when the Master calleth may they be found watching and waiting to enter upon their rest, and rejoin, never to part again, their sainted husband and father. H.

WHAT THE SPARROW CHIRPS.

BY PEARL RIVERS.

I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree;
My life is of little value,
But the Master careth for me.

He gave me a coat of feathers,
It is very plain, I know:
With never a speck of crimson,
For it was not made for show—

But it keeps me warm in the winter,
And it shields me from the rain;
Were it brodered with gold or purple,
Perhaps it would make me vain.

By and by, when the spring time cometh,
I will build me a little nest,
With many a chirp of pleasure,
In the spot I like the best.

And the Master will give me wisdom
To build it of leaves most brown;
Warm and soft it must be for my birdies,
And so I will line it with down.

I have no barn or store house,
I neither sow nor reap;
God gives me a sparrow's portion,
But never a seed to keep.

If my meal is sometimes scanty,
Close picking makes it sweet;
I have always enough to do me,
And "life is more than meat."

I have no roof from the tempest,
But the Master will provide;
When the tempest comes I always find
A shelter where I can hide.

I know there are many sparrows,
All over the world we are found—
But our Heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground.

Though small, we are never forgotten;
Though weak, we are never afraid;
For we know that the Master keepeth
The life of the creature he made.

I fly through the thickest forests,
I light on many a spray—
I have no chart or compass,
But I never lose my way.

And I fold my wings at twilight,
Wherever I happen to be;
For the Master is my Father,
And no harm will come to me.

I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree,
But I know that the Father loves me—
Have you less faith than me?

How Walter Thought and Prayed.

BY MAXWELL.

"Now try to keep wide awake, so that if Charlie should cry you will hear him," said Mrs. Brandon to her son Walter, as she parted with him at the front door of a pleasant farm-house, which stood a little way from the village church. She turned the key, tripped down the walk, and took her husband's arm at the gate, when the minister, who had ridden eight miles to fill his appointment, was impatiently thinking that his wife was never late in starting for church. It was Sabbath night. Not a star was shining through the clouds, but it was too cold and windy to be careful about umbrellas.

"Mother will wish she had stayed at home, I guess," said Walter to himself, when the closing door let in just enough of the wing of the wind to blow out his lamp. "But she loves preaching so much that she would risk a hurricane. Father says that if everybody in Noah's time had loved sermons as much as she does the people would have gone through the first of the awful rains to hear the preacher of righteousness, and there would not have been any flood."

Walter found his way into the nursery, where a bright fire was burning. "I'll not light the lamp again," thought he, "there is such a fine blaze on the hearth. If mother were here I would read aloud in my library-book. But how wrong it is for me to wish that she had not gone to church!" Walter stood and looked into the fire, and thought.

There was one thing that his mother had supposed he would do. She had placed his favorite chair by the little table, thinking that he would there sit down and read. Just where it might catch his eye she had laid a new tract, entitled "Are you a Christian?" But he had missed seeing it. Was that for the better? If the wind had not blown out his lamp he would hardly have failed to see it. Was that wind a breath of the Lord?

"How brave the martyrs must have been," thought Walter, "to stand up by a post and have an awful fire around them, and sing, and die happy! I wonder how they could do it." He turned away to catch some more pleasant thoughts. His eye fell upon the face of his little sister Grettie, who was sleeping too soundly to dream that the morrow would be her birthday, when she would be four years old. He went to her crib and put his ear almost to her lips, so as to be sure that she was breathing. She gave one harder breath, as sleeping children often do, as if she meant to assure him that she was still alive. "How cunning that is!" he whispered. "Grettie shall have a kiss for that." His lips were true to their words. He then took her little chair, sat down in front of the fire, and began to think again.

What was he thinking about—the lad of ten years? I should not know if he had not once given me to understand what then passed through his mind.

It was not about the darkness out of doors, and that had crept into all the rooms of the house but one; for he was too manly to have any fears of the black night. It was not about robbers, for no burglar had ever caused an alarm at the farm-house. Rover would insure the premises against vagabonds.

"I am quite alone," thought he, "and this only the second time that I have been left to guard the house while the older people went to church. If I were always alone, and had to live by myself in the woods, I should think about the great God more than I do. If Jacob had been as much afraid of God as I am, how could he have laid his head on a stone and dreamed of heaven, and seen angels! I never dreamed of God; is it because I do not often think of him?"

A rustle of clothing was heard. Walter turned and saw Charlie floundering about for a moment. Upon going to him he found the child of a year and a half very quiet again; he had only changed his place, so that he was lying crosswise in bed, with one foot thrown up on the pillow. "If he should take cold he might die, as my dear little brother Andrew did, when he was of Charlie's age," said Walter, carefully drawing the cover over him. This done, he sat down again, gazed into the fire, and thought.

"If Charlie should die," thought Walter, "he would go to heaven, he is so little. Jesus would carry him away to his home in the skies. But what if I should die? What would become of me? I should go somewhere. I am old enough to be punished for my sins." He looked into the red flames. He thought of "the fire that is never quenched." He remembered that the Bible declares "the wicked shall be turned into hell," and he said to himself, "That is the place where all liars shall go, and all thieves. What if I should go there! It is awful to think of it. And yet I almost told a lie one day about father's knife, which I lost, and I almost stole some pennies once from his desk, and I was wicked when I grew so angry at Grettie that I pushed over her playhouse, and called her a little fool for crying about her broken china. It was very wicked, and it made me feel so badly that I could not say my prayers that night, and yet I knelt down, and so deceived my good mother that she thought I said them with all my heart."

Walter did not like to think of his sins. He sought to turn his mind from so painful a subject. He threw back his head and gazed at the ceiling. His eyes expanded; he seemed to be looking far into infinity, and he suddenly stretched out his hand as if he were trying to grasp a great thought, for even a child may wrestle with weighty realities. "Oh, eternity!" he exclaimed, with a groan, "I shall live on and on for ever."

"I shall one day stand before God," he continued to say to himself, "and he will see me and know all about me—all that I ever did, or said, or thought. And what will he say to me? Will he tell me to go with the angels and with all the good, like my grandfather, who told me, when I saw him die, to meet him in heaven?"

Thus Walter's thought ran upon the great themes of eternity, and seemed to carry him away from this world. Perhaps if he had sat down to read a book or paper he would have become absorbed in a trifling story, which would have amused him, but have done him no good. It was well that he had sat down to think.

He scarcely knew how it was, but after a while he found himself kneeling by his chair, confessing his sins, and pleading that God would forgive him. "O Lord! keep me from becoming a wicked man, and from going to dwell with thieves and liars in that awful place of fire. Make me like Jesus. I give myself to Jesus. I want him to give me a new heart. I want to love him and serve him, and go to heaven. And if I grow up to be a man, I want to be a minister, and preach the gospel." This last idea had often been in Walter's mind, but never before in his prayer.

He was happy, happier than he had ever been in all his life. He continued kneeling, thinking and praying. The time passed, he knew not how rapidly. God was near to him, and he was nearer to his Saviour than ever before. The love of Jesus filled his heart.

A step was heard on the front porch. He was surprised that his parents should come so soon. He rose and opened the door. "You are a brave little man," said the minister, "to stay here all alone. Were you lonely?"

Walter knew not what to say.

"I forgot," said the minister. "You were not alone. The Lord was here. I hope you thought of that."

"Yes, sir." Once Walter would have been silent, if not sullen, at such a remark.

"Were you afraid of him?"

"I have been sometimes, but I hope—" Walter's heart seemed to rise into his throat, his eyes filled with tears, he could not finish his sentence.

"Never be afraid of the Lord, except when you are sinning against him, or are neglecting your salvation. He is the best friend you will ever have in this world and in eternity also, if you follow him to heaven."

These were gladdening words to Walter, who felt so timid that he had little to say. Almost the first thing that his mother did when she placed the lighted lamp on the stand was to see if the tract left there for her boy had been read. With a look of disappointment she asked, "Walter, how have you spent the Sabbath evening?"

He felt too diffident to make any reply, but he looked with curious interest at the beautifully covered tract which she was quietly slipping out of sight. It was evident to her that he had not before noticed it, and her conclusion was that he was very careless about religion.

"I should be sorry," said she, "if you had spent it in sleeping, or in foolish reveries."

He was still silent.

"How happened it that the lamp was not burning when we came home?"

"The wind put it out just as you were leaving," said he, "and I did not need to have it lighted." Now came a temptation. Should he say, "The fire was bright enough for me to read by?" and thus make it appear that he had been engaged with a book? He spurned the tempter. He was too faithful to prevaricate.

"Did you sit down and do nothing, my son?"

He seemed to be studying for an answer.

"It is a sin for us to do nothing. If God will call us to account for 'every idle word,' he surely will for every idle hour."

Poor Walter! He found himself misjudged, and that by his own mother, to whom he had always frankly told his sorrows. She misinterpreted his shyness and his tears. It was rude treatment of a new-born child of God—a rudeness far from intentional. Had she at all suspected that her boy had been with Jesus in his loneliness, her joy would have been too great for words. She had hoped for some good result from the tract; the Lord had chosen another method of grace. With all the means which a parent may employ, God takes his own way in converting a child to himself.

That night, long after the house was dark and still, and all others were asleep, Mrs. Brandon heard the sobbings of her grieved son. She went to his bedside, inquired tenderly the cause of his sorrow, and seemed to impart to him the courage to tell it. No word from any child of hers had ever been so joyful to this devoted mother as the broken language of Walter when he said—

"Do not suppose that I was doing nothing while you were at church to-night; I was thinking, and praying, and giving myself to the Lord."

* * * * * * * * * *

A prosperous church is now under the care of a pastor who often gives this advice: "Read all you can that is good—your Bible, tracts, books and papers. But by all means think. Stop in your reading and think. Sit down alone at night, look into the fire, and think. Grasp the great things of God and eternity. Think what will become of you. Either hell or heaven will be yours for ever; think of that, and pray at once and with all your might for salvation. I know the value of such thinking and praying. Like the Psalmist, 'I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.'" This pastor can not forget the hour when the Spirit of the Lord came to the lad who sat by the fire thinking, and knelt by his chair praying, on a Sabbath evening in his younger days.—Sabbath at Home.

THE OPERA.—When I think that music too is condemned to be mad, and to burn herself upon such a funeral-pile, your celestial opera-house grows dark and infernal to me. Behind its glitter stalks the shadow of eternal death. Through it, too, I look not up into the divine eye, as Richter has it, but down into the bottomless eye-socket; not upward toward God, heaven, and the home of truth, but too truly downward toward falsity, vanity and the dwelling-place of everlasting despair.—Carlyle.

CHRISTIANITY has given to truth a dignity, independent of time and numbers. It has required that truth should be believed and respected for itself.—Vinet.

FARM AND GARDEN.

TURKEYS—SUCCESS IN RAISING.

Comparatively few people have uniformly good luck in raising turkeys. Those whose flock numbers perhaps hundreds one season will count but a bare score or two another. When the old birds are watched, shut up, and made to sit where they can be controlled, and the young receive great care from the first, they seem to do no better and often not so well as when the old turkey steals her nest in the woods and brings her young home only when she finds it hard to provide food for them. Young turkeys seem to die for no good reason. Some of the readers of the Agriculturist report their dying at the rate of 20 or 30 a day. The gapes destroyed many, and a slight cold, apparently, is frequently the cause of whole broods dying. The lack of proper food is also, no doubt, a prolific cause of disaster. One of the best suggestions we have lately seen is the recommendation to use an empty hay bay for early chickens, locating the coops in different corners. This would be just the place for young turkeys, provided they could have grass, finely chopped roots, or similar vegetable food. Such a place is, however, greatly exposed to depredations of rats, and these are great foes of young poultry of all kinds.

The food of all young animals is of an animal nature. In the earliest period of the existence of young birds it consists of the yolk of the egg. On this they live before and for some time after they leave the shell. Turkeys and chickens are never hungry when first hatched, and may go at least two days unfed without harm. This is because a portion of the yolk of the egg remains in the digestive organs, to serve as food until they get familiar with the world and some of its responsibilities and cares. The gizzard is not yet in order to grind up hard grains like flint corn, simply cracked, or in the shape of course meal. The instincts of the mother bird are a tolerably good guide to the kind of food adapted to her young. Throw her some grain, or Indian meal wet up, and she will consume it with the greatest greediness herself; give, on the contrary, a soft worm or grub, and she will call her young to get it, and pick it to pieces for them. Hard-boiled egg, mashed, and boiled liver, also mashed fine, are adapted to their easy digestion, and should be fed to them for the first few days at least, together with bread crumbs, fine Indian meal mush (cooked,) and if they are not upon the ground, some clean, sharp sand.

Another excellent suggestion in regard to turkeys is made by Mr. J. A. Richardson, of Kane Co., Ill., who writes that they seldom lose a turkey, except by accident, if each brood is treated as follows: "We make a tight pen 12 feet square, and 16 inches high, of boards, and in this we place the young turkeys when first hatched, and let them remain until they are able to fly out. On one side of the pen we make a shelter of boards, to protect them from the sun and from the rains. We feed during the first week with boiled egg chopped fine, and good wheat bread, in about equal quantities. The second week we give curd made by heating sour milk, and bread made of wheat shorts, or coarse flour. When three weeks old we give them dandelions chopped fine and mixed with their food. Up to this time we feed six times a day at regular intervals, and always furnish plenty of fresh water. When seven or eight weeks old wheat makes excellent feed. We use screenings or small wheat. The old turkey will not leave the young; consequently she is not confined."—American Agriculturist.

INFORMATION ABOUT FERTILIZERS.—Mr B. asks: "Cannot the editor of the American Agriculturist give us correct information in regard to the merits of different fertilizers without fear or favor? The manufacturers might be angry, but the farmers would be benefited" We would gladly do so, but the subject is surrounded with difficulties. The best plan is to buy only from responsible parties, and insist on a guarantee in regard to the composition of the manure. Keep a sample in a tightly corked bottle, and if there is afterward reason to suspect that the manure was very poor, have it analyzed, and if it is inferior sue for damages.—American Agriculturist.

EARLY CULTIVATION OF POTATOES.—Much labor may be saved by running a bush harrow over the ground just as the shoots are breaking through. This will disturb the whole surface of the ground, and is equivalent to a good hoeing. A week or ten days later go between the rows with a cultivator, and if the young shoots are covered deeply with dirt it will not harm them. The early sorts will only need cultivating once or twice more, and this can be done by horse-power. Early and frequent cultivation makes cheap potatoes.—Am. Agriculturist.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Doremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans; then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $30 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S. by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them: according to that Scripture which says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1820.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

In most departments of the general market there is no special change to notice. In the grocery department, and also in the hardware line, the business has been moderately active, all things considered, for this period of the season, and there is still a pretty fair attendance of buyers of dry goods. The Western produce market is not so active as it was; the demand for both corn and provisions has slackened considerably, and prices are not so firm as at the date of our previous report. The business doing in sugar and molasses, in the wholesale way, is wholly confined to the foreign articles, for which there is a very limited demand, the stocks at the same time being large. Owing to the Easter holidays in England, and their observance with us also, but more perhaps to the very erratic course of the Liverpool cotton market, those engaged in the trade here have not been operating freely. The reduced stock on sale renders the market under comparatively easy control, however, so that the inactivity has not had much influence on the market.

COTTON.—The market opened on Saturday in a very quiet way, and it remained free from any excitement until near the close of the day. No telegrams were received from Liverpool on Saturday, owing to the usual observance of the Easter holidays, but the advices from New York, reporting considerable activity in that market at advancing prices, Middling being quoted at 31½ to 32c., imparted a more confident feeling here, more especially as the supply in the hands of factors was so limited. The higher prices asked, however, together with the perplexity of buyers resulting from the rather incoherent accounts last received from Liverpool, restricted operations until after the usual time for closing business, when, holders having come down a little in their asking prices, the demand suddenly revived, and the sales for the day were swelled to 4,000 bales, on the basis of 29c. for Good Ordinary, 30c. for Low Middling and 31c. for Middling. On Monday morning buyers came forward pretty freely, stimulated to some extent, it would appear, by the favorable accounts from New York, and later in the day they were further encouraged to proceed with business by the tenor of the Liverpool telegrams, which, though unofficial, were accepted as reliable. They quoted Middling Orleans first at 12½ and subsequently at 12¾d., a material rise. The more general demand resulting from these accounts naturally led factors to claim higher prices, in which they succeeded to the extent of 1 to 1½c., the market closing at 30 to 30½c. for Good Ordinary, 31 to 31½ for Low Middling, and 32 to 32½ for Middling, with sales of fully 4,200 bales during the day. On Tuesday there were a good many parties out in the market, and holders were exceedingly stringent in their views. The sales during the day reached only 600 bales, without any quotable variation from the ruling rates of Monday, which we repeat below.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,800 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 6,531 bales, against 7,783 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 1,202 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 557,702 bales, against 646,247 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 346,560 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 122,620 bales to Great Britain, of 49,586 to France, and of 121,551 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	30 to 30½
Low Middling	31 to 31½
Middling	32 to 32½

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED!

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 83 CARONDELET street.

T. S. COLIER, M. D.

ATLANTA, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Colier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Colier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Colier can cure any case of Cancer

The Impeachment of President Johnson

The impeachment of the American President has, by a curious coincidence, caused another postponement of the trial of Mr. Jefferson Davis. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court has the extraordinary duty of sitting in judgment on the heads of two governments which were lately engaged in a desperate war. From the time when the irritation of the conflict began to subside there has been a general feeling that judicial proceedings afforded no satisfactory solution of political difficulties. Technical excuses have consequently been devised for adjourning from time to time the trial of the Confederate President; and he has now for some months been at liberty on bail, nor is there any reason to fear that he will be subjected to any vindictive punishment. Mr. Johnson has given more recent offence to the dominant party; and the mild penalty attached by the Constitution to conviction on impeachment satisfies the consciences of political opponents who would perhaps hesitate to exact severer vengeance. Temperate and thoughtful Republicans, however, disapprove of a measure which they consider unjust in itself, and dangerous as a precedent. The popular clamor for impeachment was provoked by Mr. Johnson's perverse obstinacy in dealing with Mr. Stanton, and it has rapidly subsided. The violence of the managers of the impeachment tends to provoke a reaction, and it has already become evident that party animosities are likely to influence the proceedings of the Senate. The request of the President, through his counsel, for a delay of a month to prepare his defence, may perhaps not have been reasonable, but it was supported by the few Democrats in the Senate, and rejected by a party vote of the majority. One Senator—the same Mr. Chandler who occasionally insists on war with England—suggested, with characteristic wisdom, the possible expediency of impeaching a contumacious Chief Justice. Mr. Chase will probably, to the utmost of his power, conduct the trial with judicial regularity, but his temporary colleagues have already deprived him of a vote; and the rules which have been adopted are principally intended to avoid the delay which the counsel for the President may be expected to interpose. A trial of several weeks would perhaps allow time for a revulsion of public opinion, which would not be without effect on the decision of the Senate. It is also an important consideration that the term of office which is the prize of the struggle is constantly wearing away. Mr. Wade can at the utmost only hope for an eleven months' enjoyment of the Presidency, and in seven months the election of a successor will deprive the outgoing incumbent of a great part of his power. A conviction which would render Mr. Johnson ineligible for re-election might perhaps be considered, by the Democratic party, as a doubtful disadvantage.

If the Senate determines on proceeding in a judicial rather than in a political spirit, the validity of the President's defence will probably be decided by the ruling of the Chief Justice. The plea that the tenure-of-office act was inapplicable to a minister originally appointed by Mr. Lincoln is strictly technical, for Congress intended to legislate for the particular case of Mr. Stanton, who had undoubtedly been Secretary of War before Mr. Johnson succeeded to the Presidency. In admitting the objection, the Senate would condemn its own carelessness in legislation; but the Chief Justice will consider the point with perfect impartiality, and it is said that some eminent lawyers in America hold that it ought to prevail. A graver issue will be raised by the argument that the tenure-of-office act is void, as being incompatible with the Constitution. It appears that the Senate will hold itself competent to decide, for the purposes of impeachment, a question which, in ordinary cases affecting person and property, rests exclusively with the Supreme Court. In this instance, also, the Senate sits in judgment on itself, for the moral offence of passing an unconstitutional act is not less grave than the crime of violating a valid statute. The point is not determined by the letter of the Constitution, and perhaps the Senate may refuse to take notice of the uniform opinion of commentators and statesmen. It is certain that the framers of the Constitution intended to distribute the powers of government between the Executive and the Legislature, leaving no room for ministers partially independent of the President. If it is held that the act is constitutional, there will remain the further question whether the President committed an impeachable crime in endeavoring, by the only means in his power, to obtain a decision of the Supreme Court on a doubtful point of the highest importance. If Mr. Stanton had not been dismissed, his place would not, on a return to a quo warranto, have appeared to be vacant, and consequently it would have been impossible to raise the issue whether he held his place during the pleasure of the President. It may or it may not be expedient that a country should be governed by two classes of laws, of which one is transcendental or paramount; but the founders of the American Republic thought fit to exclude from their scheme a sovereign Legislature. The Constitution ought, for some purposes, to be considered a treaty among the States of the Union; and it can scarcely be denied that the President is, for certain purposes, the guardian of the fundamental contract. If he is never to disobey an act of Congress he can never appeal to the Supreme Court to exercise its most important function; and it is easy to imagine cases in which he might be compelled to choose between the risk of impeachment and the commission of treason.

Whatever may be the result of the trial, no violence or convulsion is to be apprehended. In the event of a conviction being obtained, Mr. Johnson will retire into privacy, Mr. Wade will succeed to his office, and Congress will for the rest of the year be no longer troubled with vetoes and messages of remonstrance. The mischief of the proceeding is to be found in the principle which it embodies, and in the precedent which it will establish. The most zealous advocates of impeachment eagerly insist on the political character of the prosecution, and contend that the business of the Senate is rather to crush an adversary than to try a person accused of a crime. Popular feeling is probably still on the side of Congress, but the time may come when a President in open hostility with the Legislature will be supported by the majority of the people. Ominous references have been already made to the opinion of the army and of the disbanded soldiery, and a military President might be tempted to resist by force the usurpations of Congress. If the Northern population had been fairly represented in Congress, none of the recent acts could have been passed over the veto of the President; and the readmission of the Southern States to the Union would probably restore the Democratic party to power. The Republican leaders in the Union are too deeply committed to the impeachment to retrace their steps, but the country feels little confidence in the wisdom of the managers, and an acquittal would probably be welcomed as a relief from confusion and danger; yet it is scarcely possible that the Senate should pronounce a verdict which would be a condemnation of the policy of the dominant party.—London Saturday Review.

THE LEVEES.—We are very glad to publish, from the Baton Rouge Advocate, such good news in regard to the levees as the following:

The weak line of levee extending down the Ferdoche and Maringouin has been raised and strengthened until it is now impregnable to the rush of the waters coming through the Grand Levee crevasses. The protecting line of levee is twelve miles in length, and the people of the country protected by it deserve great praise for the indomitable energy shown by them in its erection. They have fought water for three successive years and their fields have been swept bare. Without money or credit, or hope of aid from Congress, the State or the parishes through which their bayous run, they went to work, and it is creditable to the freedmen to say that they co-operated with them to the full extent of their ability. The result is that as many cubic yards of earth have been piled as would have sufficed to have closed Grand Levee crevasse, and this work was begun and completed without the passage of resolutions and appeals to any power for aid. The people saw that they would not be aided, and "they helped themselves." Everybody, white and black, went to work with a will, and to-day the plows are running over the fairest fields in the State, whilst the turned waters from the Mississippi rush harmlessly by.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

GEN. SHERMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The following is the material part of General Sherman's testimony before the High Court of Impeachment, on the 13th instant:

The questions and answers were read by the reporter, and then Mr. Stanbery's question was put to the witness, as follows: Have you answered as to both occasions?

Witness—The question asked me seemed to restrict me so closely to the purpose that I endeavored to confine myself to that point alone. The first day or first interview in which the President offered me the appointment, ad interim, he confined himself to general terms, and I gave him no definite answer. The second interview was on the afternoon of the 30th, not the 31st, as the question reads. It was the interview during which he made the point which I have testified to, and in speaking or referring to the constitutionality of the bill known as the tenure-of-office act. It was the constitutionality of that act which he seemed desirous of having decided, when he said if it could be brought before the Supreme Court properly it would not stand half an hour. He also spoke of force. I first said that if Mr. Stanton would simply retire, although it was against my interest, my desire, my personal wishes and my official wishes, I might be willing to undertake to administer the office ad interim. Then he supposed that the point was yielded, and I made this point: Supposing Mr. Stanton will not yield, and he answered, "Oh, he will make no opposition. You present the order, and he will retire." I expressed my doubt, and he remarked, "I know him better than you do; he is cowardly." [Laughter in the court.] I then begged to be excused from an answer. I gave the subject more reflection, and gave him my final answer in writing. I think that letter, if you insist on knowing my views, should come in evidence, and not parol testimony taken of it; that my reasons for declining the office were most personal in their nature.

Senator Henderson submitted in writing the following question:

"Did the President, on either of the occasions alluded to, express to you a conviction, resolution or determination to remove Stanton from his office?"

Witness—If by removal is meant removal by force, he never conveyed to my mind such an impression, but he did, most unmistakably, say that he could have no more intercourse with him in the relations of President and Secretary of War.

Senator Howard proposed the following question in writing:

"You say the President spoke of force; what did he say about force?"

Witness—I inquired, supposing Mr. Stanton does not yield, what then was to be done? "O," said he, "there is no necessity of considering that question; on the presentation of an order he will retire."

Senator Howard—Is that a full answer to the question?

Witness—I think it is.

PROGRESS OF THE ELECTION—PARTIAL RETURNS.

ATLANTA, April 20.—The election is progressing quietly—much enthusiasm with both parties. There was a large negro vote to-day—Bullock ahead. Gordon's friends not generally voting.

It is reported that at Marietta 180 negroes formed in line and voted for Gordon.

Weather bad.

SAVANNAH, April 20.—The election progressed quietly until toward noon, when a conservative negro was run off by the Radicals. Afterward he went up under the protection of the military and police, and voted. But few whites were able to approach the polls, on account of the mass of country negroes.

AUGUSTA, April 20.—The election is progressing without collision. The negroes, with few exceptions, voted the Radical ticket. They marched in squads from the country to the polls with banners flying and yelling for Bullock. Whenever a colored voter was suspected he was set upon and intimidated. In this way some were deterred from voting Democratic. They generally went solid for the Radical party. The excitement is intense, and but little needed to bring on a collision.—Whites generally remained away from the polls and abstained from adding to the excitement. About 2,200 votes were polled, nearly 2,000 of which were negroes. The total registered vote in the county is 5,500.

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA, April 20.—The election is proceeding quietly. Total vote polled 704—297 whites and 407 blacks. Notwithstanding the wholesale frauds of the opposite party, the Democrats are jubilant. Many negroes vote the Democratic ticket; Radicals here seem disheartened. The Loyal League bursted up on Saturday night, after which the leaguers were addressed by Mr. Lamar, editor of the Sun.

MACON, GA., April 20.—Election proceeded quietly, the negroes having the polls pretty much to themselves to-day. Votes polled to-day 1,650, only a few hundred whites.

PROGRESS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Senate.—The impeachment trial was resumed. The managers are introducing documentary evidence.

Blodgett's indictment was offered. Butler offered Blodgett's answer. Evarts objected, that Blodgett was not on trial here. Butler proceeded to state orally what he intended to prove. Chase ordered it reduced to writing. Butler protested, but Chase insisted and Butler is now writing.

Impeachment Continued.—The Senate refused to admit the Blodgett papers. Butler, appealing for Blodgett, said he had never been able to get his case before the Senate, and justice should be done him now. Blodgett was only captain of a rebel militia company, and was an unwilling captain. Blodgett would swear. Blodgett, while down in Augusta, was elected by his neighbors to make a constitution for Georgia. He was made mayor of Augusta by Pope. Butler didn't doubt that when Georgia was admitted Blodgett would take his seat here with the proudest of us.

Butler then offered the nominations of Sherman and Thomas to brevet generalship, claiming admissibility under the tenth article. The Senate refused by 14 to 35. Yeas—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Henderson, Morton, Ross, Sumner, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winekle, Willey and Yates—14.

Both parties announced evidence closed. Chase ordered the prosecution to proceed with argument. Boutwell, not being ready, asked adjournment to Monday. Defense asked until Wednesday, in view of Mr. Stanbery's sickness. Boutwell seconded the request, and after hearing and rejecting an appeal from Logan to print his argument, the court adjourned to Wednesday.

The Senate then went into executive session, and also adjourned to Wednesday.

Testimony closed.

Debate in the House on the bill to pay the expenses of the trial.

The Senate appropriation bill for impeachment was considered.—Eldridge said it was evident that $10,000 would not pay the expenses of the impeachment trial, and he thought this was a mere blind. Why did not the committee come out boldly and say this was mere bagatelle to operate on the public mind.

Washburn said if another appropriation was required he would vote for it, and he believed it would be worth $100,000 to pay the expense.

Eldridge asked if he understood that the gentleman would give $100,000 to make the impeachment trial a success.

Washburn replied that he had not exactly said that, but what he meant was that if the impeachment was a success it would be worth not $100,000, but $100,000,000 to this country in greater security to person and property. [Applause in the galleries.]

Eldridge said that he suspected, as much that this money was to be used to secure the success of impeachment. He would not vote a dollar for such a purpose.

Washburn said he would not be misrepresented, but he would reiterate that he believed the country would be benefited to the amount of millions of dollars by the removal of the usurper and tyrant from the White House.

The bill passed.

The special Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, in his dispatch of the 16th, says:

Mr. Butler jumped up very quickly and delivered a speech of twenty minutes' duration, the like of which has never before been heard on an impeachment or other trial. He started out by asserting that this was an effort to carry into effect the declarations made by the Democrats in the House that the trial would be prolonged until the end of President Johnson's term. He jumped about the floor and moved every muscle and limb of his body like a frog in the pangs of vivisection. He charged the President with every murder that had been committed, and was being committed in the South. He said these outrages upon Union men would be continued till the great criminal was removed from office.

At this Mr. Sumner put in a loud "that's so," and the galleries attempted a demonstration of applause, which, however, was quickly stopped.

Thus encouraged, Butler went on, thundering and roaring forth his denunciations of the President, charging on him the responsibility for Treasury frauds, which he said he was prepared with documentary proof to establish. He immediately produced two tabular statements, setting forth some facts connected with the sale of government gold, which, he said, proved the President to be defrauding the government.

The Senate had now begun to wonder rather than listen. Everybody stared at the impassioned gesticulator, and many thought he must have forgotten where he was and what was the occasion which called forth such a torrent of abuse where an argument was expected.

Still Butler pranced, and danced, and thundered and talked of the great criminal, and repeated his accusations about the murder of Union men in the South.

Mr. Fessenden looked at him with utter disgust.

Mr. Sumner smiled approval.

The Democrats smiled amusement and derision.

After twenty minutes of this most extraordinary style of hectoring, Butler sat down.

Mr. Evarts immediately rose, calm and collected, and was proceeding with a very sharp rebuke of Butler, whose speech he characterized as a harangue.

Mr. Cameron appealed to the chair to know if it was in order to apply the use of the word "harangue." Before Cameron had taken his seat

Mr. Doolittle jumped up: "Mr. Chief Justice," said he, "I desire to ask not if the word "harangue" is in order, but if the "harangue" itself is in order?"

There was a scene of confusion which threatened to have a serious termination, and there is no telling where it would have ended, but for the coolness and discretion of the Chief Justice, who, amid the excitement of the moment, heard a motion to adjourn coming from Mr. Terry, of Connecticut. This was evidently a welcome sound to him, and he made the best possible use of it to help himself and the Senate out of the impending trouble.

"It is moved and seconded that the Senate adjourn," said he, in a voice which told how anxious he was that the motion should prevail; "all who are in favor of that motion will say 'aye.'" Less than half the members present say "aye," but the Chief Justice did not put the negative. "The court stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock."

So the court adjourned, and for the fact that there was not a big row the Chief Justice was thanked by a great many.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The Senate did not sit to-day.

House.—Robinson offered a resolution recalling the managers and abandoning impeachment.

The Speaker declared it was a question of privilege, but under the ruling of the Speaker or of a majority the House could refuse to consider even a question of privilege. The House refused to entertain the resolution by a strict party vote.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The pressure on uncommitted Senators is tremendous, and comes from all quarters. The apprehensions of the President's friends are increasing.

The new municipal officers of Alexandria have qualified. There are no negroes and no known native Virginians among the new officers.

HAVANA, April 18.—A later arrival from Vera Cruz brings the following Mexican news:

Gen. Jimenez has submitted to the government. Juarez has just recovered from sickness. The revolution in Sinaloa is gaining ground. Brigands had sacked several towns and were committing other extensive ravages.

Oaxaca has abolished the State tax on provisions and home manufactures.

The Indian war continues in Sonora. Gov. McCormick, of Arizona, and the governor of Sonora had an interview, and arranged for means of transit through Sonora.

A Protestant church has been opened in the city of Mexico. Castero has resigned the Ministry of Justice. It is reported that arms have been sent from San Francisco to supply the revolutionists of Mazatlan.

LONDON, April 21.—A letter dated Ashongo, March 19, states that Gen. Napier had arranged for an immediate dash on the works of Theodorus at Magdala. The main body of the army had reached within ten days' march of the King's camp.

Dispatches dated at Jouda, April 2, report that Gen. Napier had started forward, and the contemplated assault by the English storming party had been made, but the result of the movement was unknown in consequence of a break in the field telegraph near the army post at Lenope.

LATEST ON IMPEACHMENT.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Judge Curtis announced to-day that it is doubtful whether Mr. Stanbery will be able to take further part in the defense. Groesbeck will follow Boutwell.

When the Senate adjourned, Boutwell was on page 32 of his fifty page speech.

The judicial election in Chicago resulted in the success of the Democrats by 500 majority; 23,000 votes were polled, and a Democratic gain of 2,500.

A close analysis of the votes of ten of the doubtful Senators upon important questions regarding the admission of evidence gives the following result: Anthony, 22 Liberal votes, 7 Radical; Fessenden, 24 Liberal, 5 Radical; Fowler, 27 Liberal, 3 Radical; Grimes, 23 Liberal, 2 Radical; Ross, 19 Liberal, 10 Radical; Sherman, 17 Liberal, 13 Radical; Sprague, 16 Liberal, 9 Radical; Trumbull, 23 Liberal, 7 Radical; Van Winkle, 25 Liberal, 5 Radical; Willey, 17 Liberal, 11 Radical.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Radicals are discontented with Boutwell's speech. The more moderate deprecate its weakness and condemn its perversion of facts, while the Conservatives laugh at it. It was published in Boston this morning, and here this afternoon. Still Boutwell will have to wade through the remaining third of it to-morrow before yawning Senators.

Church influence is obtruded upon doubtful Senators.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Conservatives express intense gratification over the election news from Louisiana, Georgia and North Carolina.

THE ELECTION.—Our returns from the country are very meager as yet; but so far they are far more favorable than we had any reason to expect. We are not without hope that the infamous Black Crook Constitution has been defeated. East Baton Rouge, West Baton Rouge, Caddo, St. Landry, St. Martin, Vermillion, Avoyelles, Livingston and St. Tammany have gone against the Constitution. St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St. Charles, St. James and Iberville have given Radical majorities.

At the time of writing we are without full official returns of the vote in this city and parish. We still think, however, that the whole Democratic ticket has been elected.—N. O. Crescent.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

LEMON SYRUP.—Eight pounds of sugar, three quarts of water, and one quart of lemon juice. Mix the sugar and water together. As soon as the sugar has dissolved place it over the fire, and boil and skim it; then add the lemon juice.

CREAM PIE.—Place a pint of milk where it will heat. Then beat together one cup of white sugar and half a cup of flour with two eggs, and stir it into the milk when it is nearly boiling. Stir it rapidly until it is cooked thoroughly; add essence of lemon, and pour upon the crust, which should be baked before the cream is put in. This will make two pies. If you wish it extra, make a frosting of the whites of two eggs, and three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Spread this evenly over the pies, and set again in the oven, and brown slightly.

JUMBLES.—A correspondent, who does not sign his note, sends us the following receipts for sweet cakes or jambles: Take one pound and three-quarters of flour, one pound and a half of pounded and sifted loaf sugar, three-quarters of a pound of butter, three eggs, and a little essence of lemon. Mix the butter to a batter; then add the eggs (unbeaten) and essence of lemon (about fifteen drops;) mix well together, and then add the flour. Take little pieces about the size of small walnuts, and roll them on the board as thick as a large quill, and about six or seven inches long. Then twist them into the shape of the figure 8, and bake in a moderate oven.

THE HEAVENLY SECRET.

Does the dark and soundless river
Stretch so wide—
The homeless rolling tide
Over which have crossed
Our loved and early lost,
That their unsealed eyes may never see
The farther side,
Where still, amid this coil and misery,
We hide?

Is the realm of their transition
Close at hand
To this our living land?
Nearer than we dream?
Can they catch the gleam
Of our smiles, and hear the words we speak?
And see our deeds?
And, looking deeper than our eyes may seek,
Our needs?

Do they mingle in our gladness?
Do they grieve
When ways of good we leave?
Do they know each thought and hope
While we in shadows grope?
Can they hear the future's high behest,
Yet lack the power
To lead us from our ill or to arrest
The hour?

When they find us bowed in sorrow
Do they sigh?
Or when the earth passes by
For them, do they forget
The cares that here beset
Their well-beloved? Or do they wait
(O be it thus!)
And watch beside the golden gate
For us?

We are yearning for their secret;
Though we call,
No answers ever fall
Upon our dulled ears
To quell our nameless fears;
Yet God is over all, whate'er may be,
And trusting so,
Patience, my heart, a little while, and we Shall know.

SWEDENBORGIANISM.

The disciples of Swedenborg, otherwise called "The New Church," are in certain quarters seeking recognition and affiliation as evangelical Christians. In the name of Christ, and in the interest of real Christian charity, we seek to discover whether the prayer should be granted.

Christ's churches must be heartily tolerant of their brethren in Christ, yet are to present a bold united front against all sin, all error, and all toleration of even the appearance of evil. Undaunted by the odium of alleged bigotry, they are to keep the faith once delivered to the saints. The whole is no stronger than the weakest part; can we, therefore, admit this New Church, thereby indorsing its essential teachings and making common cause with its doctrine, history, and influential tendencies?

We fear not.

All churches are associated believers in Christ, deriving their faith from revelation, which revelation, in these latter days, is embodied in the holy Scriptures. The canon of these Scriptures after centuries of investigation has become fixed, and is included in the book commonly called the Bible. The onus probandi is upon the man or sect which dismembers that canon.

In 1745 Swedenborg, according to his own account, "eat too much supper" one day, and a "vapor" clouded his sight, wherein "a man appeared to him." The next night "the same man" re-appeared, saying, "I am God, the Lord, the Creator and Redeemer of the world."—Whereupon heaven and hell, and the truths, transactions and things of each were revealed to Swedenborg, and by him recorded in the now extant Arcana Celestia. Upon this alleged third revelation—the received Mosaic being the first, and the Christian the second—is based the New Church. The old Bible is not entirely rejected, but the canon and the textus receptus have lost their former value.

Our first count in the indictment of Swedenborgianism is this disintegration of the canon. Ruth, the Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Songs, and all the New Testament, save the Gospels and Revelations, are rejected as being the word of man and not of God. The Apocalypse of Swedenborg destroys the inspired character of every other Apocalypse save that of St. John. The New Testament ceases to be the new one, and the Arcana Celestia become the pleistocene deposit of divine truth.

The remaining books of the Bible are not spared, for Swedenborg teaches principles of interpretation which embarrass common people as would the original Greek, Hebrew or Sanscrit. Practically, Swedenborgian Scripture is untranslated. The plain meaning of the text is one thing and the real meaning decidedly another. The former is the "external sense," and the latter the Swedenborgian "internal sense." These relative meanings are traced by "the Doctrine of Correspondences," and this, like Doctor Johnson's Lives of the Poets, which made his Lexicon necessary, begets the Swedenborgian "Dictionary of Correspondences." Even genealogical lists, like that in the first chapter of Matthew, have "internal senses." The external sense may be plain "Jesse," "Judas" or "Zara," "Sadoc," "Azor" or "Achim," but the internal sense may reveal homilies on spirits, heaven, faith or charity. The vocabularies are decidedly perplexing to believers in effete Revelations, but not to them alone, for we find a Swedenborg disciple denying that "a single Swedenborgian has ever correctly understood the doctrine of correspondency."

If Swedenborgianism is true, verily Paul was mistaken when he so confidently assured poor Timothy that "the word of God is not bound." Paul, however, is expurgated, possibly because of his damaging testimony. The only key to the "internal sense" of the unfortunate remnant of Holy Writ is in the New Church. Let it turn this key and Swedenborg was a prophet, albeit a crazy one. "He that runneth may read" the obvious sense of the canon, but slow Swedenborgian indoctrination has seriously impeded the New Church, as witness the eighth census of the United States. In 1860 there were 58 churches, with accommodations for 15,395. Applying the usual rule of estimation, they have about 4,000 members proper.

Successive revelations from God certainly have cumulative power and influence, but this third one of 1745 seems to be an exception, for it fails to attract or affect the masses. Even expurgated Paul and Peter had larger congregations and more converts. In 1850 there was not a single church in a Western territory, and, returning with trepidation to the eighth census, we find the same true in 1860. The explanation of the failure is, that the internal meaning of the Word is patent only to those already in the church, and sinners, the poor and all outsiders, are beyond the reach of conviction. We advise a few miracles to complement this deficiency. At present Swedenborg's Christ seems not to be "the desire of all nations." Our friends may be evangelical, but their evangelism is impotent.

2. Besides this mutilation of Scripture, we discover contradiction of Scripture. It is distinctly claimed by the New Church that it supersedes the Christian church just as the latter supersedes the Jewish. "It is not a sect, not one among other denominations, but a new dispensation." The Christian church superseded the Jewish according to prophecy, but the prophets clearly promised that the Christian church "shall never be destroyed." There is, however, no prophecy pointing to Swedenborg; no intimation that any new church founded on the subjective vision of a daft gourmand would overturn or improve the foundations laid by Christ and the apostles.

The queerest claim on this point is that the Christian church came to an end more than one hundred years ago, and that Swedenborg was an eye-witness of that transaction, and of the final judgment, both of which took place in 1757. If we mistake not, the greatest triumphs of the Christian church have taken place since that date.

The New Church Apocalypse may reveal a "great salvation," but where are Swedenborg's miracles? No miracles in front; no prophecy and scarcely a history behind! Possibly here, too, we find a hint why Paul was expurgated—for giving us the embarrassing general principle that divine revelations are always "confirmed unto us, * * * * God bearing witness both with signs and wonders and with divers miracles." If Moses and, especially, Christ were vouchsafed the sanction of miracles, mankind will be slow to concede exemption from the burden of proof to a mere man like Swedenborg.

3. Swedenborgian "revelations" are ridiculous. They profess to involve science. This unscientific "science" is put to shame by a modern school-boy. For instance, God made the planets and probably knew their number and where He placed them. If God inspired him, Swedenborg would have been unerring. The latter declares that all the planets and the moon are inhabited. It is suspicious that, in giving us an account of these astronomical foreigners, he confines himself to the moon and the five planets then alone known to science. The ethnological hiatus may be avoided by some special pleading, but the added assertion of Swedenborg that Saturn "is the farthest distant from the sun" makes a direct issue with Professor Safford's telescope. Herschel and Neptune are both more than twice farther distant than Saturn from the sun. "The same man" also revealed to Swedenborg that earth, air, fire and water are the four elements; that love makes blood red; that love is the origin of animal heat; that men's dissimilar loves make their blood dissimilar; that evil spirits cause diseases, etc.

4. Swedenborgianism is logically absurd. Passing over several more important discussions whose conclusions amount to blasphemy, we instance one or two absurdities.

The human species exclusively people the other world. No man can live "an instant" in this world without communication with spirits in the other world. Now, there must have been a time when there were no spirits in the other world, for none had yet gone from this. How, then, could any ever go there, for they must die before they go, and live at least an instant before they die. By what means the other world ever obtained a spiritual population, or how this world ever obtained a human species, are questions difficult to solve.

Again, the free agency of man is the result of an equilibrium between equally potent heavenly and hellish spirits. Swedenborg denies the existence of a personal devil. He says, too, that there is no such thing as a sinner without the ministration of evil spirits. Now since all spirits went from this world, how did the first man become a sinner when there was no previous spiritual sinner to minister unto him.

Or, since the first sinner must have gone to hell to help create the primary equilibrium, did he prefer to go to hell?—and why was he not compelled to go to heaven in the absence of that as yet unprovided equilibrium.

Ask these questions to a genuine Swedenborgian and he will sorrowfully tell you that you "don't understand Swedenborg!" That is so—we don't. If there is any "sense" in such isms, it is an "internal" one, the development of which will require a fourth "revelation."

5. This theology gives the rein to depraved humanity. Call it dogmatic, bigotry, or what you will, there are yet morally conserving forces in the orthodox doctrine of future judgment and hell. The latter derives its power from the former, for the judgment will fix a man's eternal status. Universalists and Restorationists eliminate the one, and Swedenborgians virtually the other. According to the man who expurgates Paul, the final judgment took place in 1757. The result is a sort of fatalism, not to be neutralized by Swedenborg's hatred of Calvinistic predestination.

6. Swedenborgianism is decidedly immoral, and if carried out would entitle it to be indicted as a public nuisance. Polygamy is not wrong among people whose religion permits it; hence the Mormons commit no wrong. Swedenborg debated with an angel in heaven who had several wives. A married man may cohabit with a concubine, provided the causes are "lawful," and the lawfulness of these causes is to be decided "by the man himself."—Among the fifty enumerated causes are hernia, epilepsy, phthisic, putrid breath, palsy, foul eructations from the stomach, tattling, lying, cheating, drunkenness, internal dissimilitude, and "more like causes."

Fornication by the unmarried is permitted, provided the lust cannot be restrained and the fornicator confines himself to one mistress. So teaches Swedenborg. There are good people in the New Church, but they are restrained by something other than their seer. On some of the above questions we prefer expurgated Paul to the bachelor Swedenborg who confesses that he once kept a mistress.

7. Swedenborgianism dishonors Christ. It teaches the "Trinity in Jesus Christ." This Christ redeemed humanity, not by a vicarious sacrifice, but "by removing the powers of hell." How?

Our Bible teaches that Christ was tempted in all points as are we, yet was without sin. According to Swedenborg, Christ came into the world and "assumed humanity with all its evil loves and false persuasions, and put himself into every state that man has ever been in, or can be." David in the Old Testament, according to Swedenborg, is Christ. Now Christ is the only God, hence Christ, in the thirty-second Psalm, confesses to Christ his own sins!

Imagine David, who is Christ, committing, first the murder of Uriah, and then virtual adultery with Uriah's wife. Is not all this nonsense, wickedness, blasphemy?

An article no longer than this too long one cannot treat the subject except disjointedly. We have, we think, said enough to justify at least hesitation in recognizing the New Church as evangelical. Recognition has been asked by this church in Chicago. Is it Swedenborgian? If so why does it disregard Swedenborg, who thus prohibits the affiliation:

"The faith of the New Church cannot be together with the faith of the former church, and in case they be together, such a collision and conflict will ensue as to destroy everything relating to the church in man. [The two churches] do not agree in one-third—no, not one tenth part."

Another Swedenborgian writer says that the members of the New Church

"cannot regard the old church and the world as holding the doctrines of the true Christian religion, and cannot with propriety recognize any communion of belief, except so far as the common false doctrines are rejected, and those of the New Church are received."

Are the recognized evangelical denominations ready to so far "receive the doctrines of the New Church" that they will not only expurgate Paul, but believe Swedenborg, who says that he saw Paul in "hell—black hell" with Calvin and David (who was Christ?)

We commend to both Swedenborgians and to evangelical churches the question of that prophet who is unexpurgated by either party—"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" No Swedenborgian can deny the pertinency or "internal sense" of that question.—Northwestern Advocate.

JUDGE CURTIS'S SPEECH.

The opening speech for the defense was a quiet and grave reminder of a sort of legal eloquence that was trite forty years ago. It brought to mind, in its stately periods, dispassionately, rationally, concisely uttered, the days of Marshall, Kent and Story.

Mr. Curtis is a man without a smile or a trifle. Somber in his vesture, purple is his color. He is very like Daniel Webster in stature, face and manner. He seldom walks in anybody's company—but with a slow, deliberate stride, leaning on a cane, he comes along to the capitol, ponderously mounts the steps, wipes his forehead in the ante-room, and entering the Senate, sits in a condition of vigilant retirement, like a turkey gobbler bottling his rage and working his craw. He exchanges no words with his legal brethren. If he is introduced to anybody in any pause or recess he shakes hands with that gravity that Webster used to revel in. He weighs about a hundred and ninety pounds, perhaps more. Nature gave him a good, Websterian head; and his face is a fine old liver color. He perspires with great freedom, but never through excitement. His paunch is stately; his cloth gaiters are eminently legal; no gold seal disturbs the demureness of his vest; his blue eyes retreat into his brows, and his head into his standing collar, and he listens like a phosphorescent bull-dog in a dark cellar. Such is Judge Curtis, with the additions of straight brown hair, and a face smoothly shaven.

Rising to speak, there were about twenty books of reference before him. He put his hands on the baize table, looked his gloomy grandest, and began with the manner of a funeral oration. His voice is strong, but naturally trained by the temperament of the man, and pitched upon the same easy key, it reaches the ear very pleasantly and strives to do no more. As it carried so its calm burden of argument at an equal pace, the minds of all of us left the domain of politics, and rose with its cadences into the atmosphere of law. Insensibly we all began to feel that Gen. Butler's speech, which we all had supposed a great performance, had been no more than a smart audacity. This old time man, never in a hurry, never in zeal, addressed himself to the supposition that his auditors were all learned and self-respecting gentlemen. Every time he said "Senators!" he made a cold chill go through the Senate; for during the past two weeks one half the Senators have forgotten their rank. I venture the supposition that this speech got more respect in every Senator's silent mind than any utterance of his own has had for a year past. I did not follow it clearly enough to tell you the effect of it as an argument. But it did this—which Butler, Stanbery, Wilson and Bingham failed to do—it reminded the Senate of itself and of the occasion. Everything that had been said before grew little and mean after Curtis had talked an hour. In all that time he never changed his place, never faltered for a word, nor used any undignified expression whatsoever. Judge Chase heard the argument with the gravest care. It was a study to look at the Chief Justice and the solid old pleader, taking his time so tremendously.—Washington correspondence Cincinnati Commercial.

COLORING MATTER OF BIRDS' PLUMAGE.—Professor Church recently made a curious communication to the London Chemical Society about the coloring matter of birds' plumage. A certain bird known as the Cape Lory, the Touracus albocristatus of ornithologists, has upon its pinion feathers some crimson spots supposed to be blood stains. Mr. Church has extracted the dye from these and analyzed it; and, strangely enough, finds that it contains the metal copper in some organic form of combination. No other parts of the feathers besides the red stains gave any traces of the metal.—Further experiments are stayed for want of materials. Only a grain and a half of the pigment is procurable from a single bird, at the cost of half a guinea, so that there is not much fear of the poor bird being hunted for the riches it will yield. Perhaps, however, some other denizen of the air carries more precious gifts upon its wings. With the foregoing facts before us, may we not expect that as we now get the pearl from the oyster we shall some day obtain its setting from the golden plumes of a bird?

A LIBERAL EDUCATION.

BY PROF. HUXLEY.

Suppose it were perfectly certain that the life and fortune of every one of us would, one day or other, depend upon his winning or losing a game of chess. Don't you think that we should all consider it to be a primary duty to learn at least the names and the moves of the pieces—to have a notion of a gambit, and a keen eye for all the means of giving and getting out of check? Do you not think that we should look with a disapprobation amounting to scorn upon the father who allowed his son, or the state which allowed its members, to grow up without knowing a pawn from a knight?

Yet it is a very plain and elementary truth that the life, the fortune and the happiness of every one of us, and, more or less, of those who are connected with us, do depend upon our knowing something of the rules of a game infinitely more difficult and complicated than chess. It is a game which has been played for untold ages, every man and woman of us being one of the two players in a game of his or her own. The chess-board is the world, the pieces are the phenomena of the universe, the rules of the game are what we call the laws of nature. The player on the other side is hidden from us. We know that his play is always fair, just and patient. But also we know, to our cost, that he never overlooks a mistake, or makes the smallest allowance for ignorance. To the man who plays well the highest stakes are paid with that sort of overflowing generosity with which the strong shows delight in strength. And one who plays ill is checkmated—without haste, but without remorse.

My metaphor will remind some of you of the famous picture in which Retzsch has depicted Satan playing at chess with man for his soul. Substitute for the mocking fiend in that picture a calm, strong angel who is playing for love, as we say, and would rather lose than win—and I should accept it as an image of human life.

Well, what I mean by education is learning the rules of this mighty game. In other words, education is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of nature, under which name I include not merely things and their forces, but men and their ways, and the fashioning of the affections and of the will into an earnest and loving desire to move in harmony with those laws. For me education means neither more nor less than this. Anything which professes to call itself education must be tried by this standard, and if it fails to stand the test I will not call it education, whatever may be the force of authority or of numbers upon the other side.

It is important to remember that, in strictness, there is no such thing as an uneducated man. Take an extreme case. Suppose that an adult man, in the full vigor of his faculties, could be suddenly placed in the world, as Adam is said to have been, and then left to do as he best might. How long would he be left uneducated?—Not five minutes. Nature would begin to teach him through the eye, the ear, the touch, the properties of objects. Pain and pleasure would be at his elbow telling him to do this and avoid that, and by slow degrees the man would receive an education which, if narrow, would be thorough, real, and adequate to his circumstances, though there would be no extras and very few accomplishments.

And if to this solitary man entered a second Adam, or better still, an Eve, a new and greater world, that of social and moral phenomena, would be revealed. Joys and woes, compared with which all others might seem but faint shadows, would spring from the new relations. Happiness and sorrow would take the place of the coarser monitors, pleasure and pain; but conduct would still be shaped by the observation of the natural consequences of actions; or, in other words, by the laws of the nature of man.

To every one of us the world was once as fresh and new as to Adam. And then, long before we were susceptible of any other mode of instruction, nature took us in hand, and every minute of waking life brought its educational influence, shaping our actions into rough accordance with nature's laws, so that we might not be ended untimely by too gross disobedience. Nor should I speak of this process of education as past for any one, be he as old as he may. For every man the world is as fresh as it was the first day, and as full of untold novelties for him who has the eyes to see them. And nature is still continuing her patient education of us in that great university, the universe, of which we are all members—nature having no Test Acts.

Those who take honors in nature's university, who learn the laws which govern men and things and obey them, are the really great and successful men in this world. The great mass of mankind are the "Poll," who pick up just enough to get through without much discredit. Those who won't learn at all are plucked, and then you can't come up again.—Nature's pluck means extermination.

Thus the question of compulsory education is settled so far as nature is concerned. Her bill on that question was framed and passed long ago. But, like all compulsory legislation, that of nature is harsh and wasteful in its operation. Ignorance is visited as sharply as willful disobedience—incapacity meets with the same punishment as crime. Nature's discipline is not even a word and a blow, and the blow first, but the blow without the word. It is left to you to find out why your ears are boxed.

The object of what we commonly call education—that education in which man intervenes and which I shall distinguish as artificial education—is to make good these defects in nature's methods, to prepare the child to receive nature's education, neither incapably nor ignorantly, nor with willful disobedience, and to understand the preliminary symptoms of her displeasure without waiting for the box on the ear. In short, all artificial education ought to be an anticipation of natural education. And a liberal education is an artificial education—one which has not only prepared a man to escape the great evils of disobedience to natural laws, but has trained him to appreciate and to seize upon the rewards which nature scatters with as free a hand as her penalties.

That man, I think, has had a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will, and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of, whose intellect is a clear, cold, logic engine, with all its parts of equal strength, and in smooth working order, ready, like a steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work, and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness, and to respect others as himself.

Such a one, and no other, I conceive, has had a liberal education, for he is, as completely as a man can be, in harmony with nature. He will make the best of her, and she of him. They will get on together rarely—she as his ever beneficent mother, he as her mouthpiece, her conscious self, her minister and interpreter.—Macmillan's Magazine.

CONFISCATED TITLES AND PROPERTY.—For some days past the United States Court has been engaged in the consideration of a suit, brought by Thomas J. Semmes, to set aside the condemnation of his residence on Annunciation street, which was made during the war under the confiscation act. The grounds in this case were peculiar, the judgment of condemnation having been opened for certain purposes by consent of the United States District Attorney, and had never been closed.

After a long argument, in which Messrs. Semmes, Billings and Conrad for Mr. Semmes, Mr. Mills for the purchaser of the property, and ex-District Attorney Waples for the Government, Judge Durell declared his opinion that the sale was illegal. The judgment, however, has not been formally entered up.

Meantime, the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Armstrong, and Union Insurance Company vs. United States et als., would appear to invalidate all the confiscation judgments and sales which were made during the war. The parties whose property was thus wrested from them are not inactive in prosecuting their rights, and they will certainly have the sympathy of the whole community in every legitimate effort they make in the premises.—*N. DORE'S NEW PICTURES.

A morning in Gustavo Dore's atelier is a treat a prince might envy. The truth expressed in the adage, that the poet is born, not made, applies with equal if not greater force to the painter. No amount of mere acquirements will enable a man to write poetry who has not received the gift of song. The poet enters, however, on his vocation with but little extraneous help. With the painter it is otherwise. He must go through a laborious and expensive course of study in order to acquire the mechanique of his art before he can stand beside the poet as an interpreter of nature, before he can adequately give expression to the conceptions of his imagination. It is not every eye which can detect the peculiar excellence of a great artist's work. Admiration may be excited in the highest degree, and yet the subject of it may be unable to detect where the charm lies. This is especially the case in regard to that department of the art of painting in which the chief influence upon the mind of the beholder is derived from color. No man in modern times has unfolded so fully or with so much magnificence as Gustave Dore the glories and mysteries of color. No one can dispute that his works are among the noblest and most beautiful illustrations which could be given of modern genius in art. As you stand in his atelier you are amazed by the versatility of his genius. You cannot rank him with the classiques, and still less with the realistes—he is rather an eclectic, holding a middle station between them. But I must explain that the object of my visit was to convey to your readers a faint idea of the tout ensemble which will meet their eye at the exhibition to take place in London during the present season, of some of Gustave Dore's chef d'oeuvres, which exhibition will be held under the direction of Messrs. James Liddle Fairless and Mr. G. L. Beeforth. The place chosen is the German Gallery, New Bond street, which I only fear will be too small a space for the wealth of productions which have entirely absorbed M. Dore's attention for several months past for the purpose of impartjug a complete idea of his talent to the British public, of whose judgment and artistic taste, I may tell you in confidence, he has a much higher opinion than of that of his own countrymen.

The leading feature of this exhibition will consist of a magnificent allegorical subject representing "The Triumph of Christianity, or the Downfall of Paganism"—a composition admirably suited for the display of M. Dore's remarkable imaginative faculty, and which for sublimity of conception and grandeur of effect will command general admiration. The picture may be said to consist of two distinct phases. The central figure in the upper section stands the Saviour, holding a cross, the figure almost lost in a flood of glory, encircled by winged angels and by the glorified spirits of the redeemed. In presence of the Christian revelation paganism sinks to the deepest abyss of darkness and oblivion. On the left, as it were, of the lower section of the picture, Africa, with her heathen gods, the bull Apis and his adepts; toward the centre Asia and the god Dagon; the Babylonish divinities Baal, Nimrod, the Assyrian bulls, the gods of India, are all precipitated into the boundless sea of gloom and shame. Jupiter and the Grecian divinities recede in the distance on the right, and on the left the gods of the North, Thor, Odin, etc., and the Druid priesthood gradually vanish from sight. To give an idea of the splendor of the coloring displayed in the jewelled adornments, the gold-worked vestments, the helmets and the various insignia—if I may use the expression—of these heathen divinities and their attendant priesthood, would require a pen dipped in the gorgeous colors of the great master's palette. But this is not the only work preparing for London. There is a splendid composition from Milton, which, though as yet unfinished, bears the impress of great genius. The angels, after their victory over Satan, spend one night on earth to contemplate the battle field. The conquered in millions lie heaped on the broad plains of earth, now lost in the dark shadow of eternal night. The hosts of white-winged angels crowd an eminence from whence in the calm majesty of power they look down on the slain. Day is breaking and the first roseate hues of morning flush their ethereal forms. This picture is destined to have a tremendous success.

But many and various are the subjects intended for London. There is a wonderful painting: Several Carthusian monks in their white robes occupying the stalls of their convent chapel, listening to mass. The subject handled with less genius would be monotonous in the extreme, but Dore's brush has made of it a most startling and characteristic picture of convent life. Most of the monks are old men; many of them appear stupefied by their long seclusion, others are absorbed in devotion, others, again, are asleep. In strong contrast to these is the central figure of this long row of aged ascetics, a young man, the beauty and refinement of whose features at once mark him as of a different race from his companions. There is sorrow, love, regret—nay, more, hopeless dismay, in every line of his countenance. In a moment of despair and disgust he has turned his back on the world, and its joys and its loves, and rushed into the convent. The door has closed on him forever, but whether he there found peace is the question. Certainly his rash act has proved an utter failure. I regret that this picture has little chance of appearing in England, as Count de Nieuwerkerque has marked it for his salon in Paris; but you must not complain. You may—I cannot promise—have a wonderful portrait, the only one he has ever executed, of Patti. It is life-size and life-like. He has certainly idealized the spoilt child of song; but the likeness is perfect She stands in white drapery, her hands crossed on her handkerchief—for all ornament a crimson rose, perdu in her dark chevelure.

For London there is a large picture, "Beggars in a Street at Seville;" only if the children of Spanish beggars are a tithe as lovely as here depicted, princes may envy their possession. A setting sun, seen athwart a pine forest (strongly recalling Danby's effect of red sunlight,) three Alpine views, wonderful in the contrast of valleys half veiled, the rising mists, and the sunlit rocks which bound the horizon; three Spanish subjects—one a Spanish lady and her duenna, having her fortune told by a Gitano; a second, the same lovely Sevillana and her hideous duenna ascending the steps of an old cathedral, distributing alms to the poor who bend low as she passes; and the third, "Vespers:" groups of southern beauties shrouded in their lace mantillas, kneeling on the cathedral floor absorbed in prayer or—gossip. There are some Biblical subjects, of which one is sure to command a tremendous price. The subject is "Gideon and the Camels Halting." While the animals lap the water, the Israelitish chief watches with anxiety for the promised omen. The water in this picture is something wonderful. It is clear, but strewn with green weeds; gleams of scarlet light—for the sun is fast setting—streak its even surface; this gorgeous light is seen through the crowd of camels and the groups of Jewish warriors. The coloring recalls that of the marvellous Claude Lorraine, in the Doria Palace at Rome; and yet the subject is treated with something of the mystic fancy of Turner. Altogether it is a wonderful picture. It may interest you to know that M. Dore is not a painter only, but an admirable musician. He receives on Sunday evenings at his private residence. Lately, Gueymard and an artist whose name escapes me were executing a duo from "Guillaume Tell," from memory, therefore without music. M. Dore improvised an accompaniment on his violin, which, if he were not the painter he is, would have won for him the rank of a true musician. Du reste, like all men of genius, he commands our sympathy at once by the rare and exceeding simplicity of his manner and the cordial frankness of his reception. I forgot to mention that among the drawings en grisaille which M. Dore will exhibit at the German Gallery will be the original sketches of the well-known ascent of the Matterhorn, which proved fatal to Lord Hubert Douglas and his three friends, as well as of the frightful accident, with the engravings from which you are familiar.

THE SEXES OF THE BEE.

To some it may seem out of place at the present day to occupy space in attempting to point out the different sexes of the bee; but I find, in my conversations with many old bee-keepers, that it is still a subject of doubt with them whether it is the drone, queen or working bee which lays the eggs.

I intend then, in this paper, to point out the economy of the hive. Schirachs, German naturalist, was the first to ascertain that there was no difference between common worker eggs and those laid for the especial production of queen bees, and that any egg laid in a worker's cell was capable of being converted into a queen, if the bees had access to it not more than three or four days after its having been laid, and that in fact every working bee is an undeveloped queen. This is now well known among all bee-keepers who have paid any attention to the subject, and has been proved in various ways, that of artificial swarming being one of them.—This is now adopted by many bee-keepers.

I will state a case that occurred in my own apiary last year. I had a queen in 1863 which could lay only drone eggs from being bred late in the year, and being unsuccessful in her wedding flights. I kept her still among her subjects all the winter to see if she would continue drone-laying in the spring, and found that she did. I removed her on the 2d of May, and gave the subjects a bar frame of eggs taken from a Ligurian queen hive. However, from some cause they were not successful in bringing any queens to maturity, although they began seven queen cells, and then reduced the number to three; but they were all abortive, a circumstance which seldom happens.

I then took out on the point of my knife a new-laid egg from a cell in the same Ligurian hive, taking care to remove the piece of the cell which had the egg attached to it, and placed it in one of the queen's cells which had proved a failure. I watched it with great attention to see the result, and was rewarded by seeing the young princess eat herself out of the cell on the 25th of June, last year. She came off with a fine top swarm on the 14th of June this year. In this case there could be no doubt but that the queen was raised from the egg that I put in, as I took care that there was no other than worker eggs, all sealed up, in the hive before I introduced the egg into the queen's cell. It takes about sixteen days to rear a queen, and twenty-one days for workers, and a young queen coming off with a second or third swarm will be laying eggs in six days after if the weather is fine.

I had a third swarm from a Ligurian on the 12th of June this year, and on examining her on the 19th I found that she had laid many hundreds of eggs. So she had been successful in finding a mate her first wedding flight after swarming.

The drones are the males, and are laid by the queen in cells larger than the worker bees.—They are reared in about sixteen days. It has been a matter of much speculation why it is that there are so many drones in hives, while they do nothing but eat. Some writers, the "Times' Bee-master," Dr. Cumming, among the number, hold the opinion that the drones are for keeping up the heat in the interior of the hive when there are plenty of worker bees in the cells. If they were necessary for that purpose we would naturally be led to expect them to be seen at an early period of the year, when heat is really necessary, as in the cold months of January, February, March and April; but it is not till the latter end of April or the beginning of May that any drone eggs are laid; and, besides, the worker brood and the workers themselves are as capable of rendering heat as the drones, and are more required at that time, when all the energy of the hive is in operation; so that the "Times' Bee-master" has no ground for his opinion, when we know that the young princess, in order to secure a husband, generally comes out of the hive from one to two o'clock, and celebrates the happy event in the air, remaining only a few minutes out. Thus we can see the wise provision made by having a great number of drones, (although only one is required,) that there may be as little chance as possible either of the queen remaining long out, or having to go for a mate.

And that it is a great event in the economy of the hive is evident to any one who watches the commotion that takes place among the bees, and with what joy they receive the queen when she returns from the wedding ceremony, knowing well that, had any accident occurred, they were powerless to rectify it, if it were a second or a third swarm. The queen seldom if ever goes out of the hive after the event, unless to swarm. The young queen continues to lay workers' eggs till September, and commences again in February, or earlier, according to the strength of the hive and the season.

All the drone and workers' cells are wrought horizontal in the hive, as any one may have observed in a piece of comb. The queen-cell hangs perpendicular from the comb, her head being undermost. I am unable to give any opinion for the reason of this strange position.—The queen is fed with what Huber termed royal jelly—not an improper term, as it has just the consistency of apple jelly, but it is white and has a sweet taste; while the workers are, while in the cell, fed with a yellow or brownish matter, much thinner than that of the queen's, and has a bitter taste.—They all eat themselves out of the cells without any assistance from the bees.—Scottish Farmer.

Economy in Feeding Fowls Boiled Grain.—In France it is the custom to cook grain given fowls when fattening, boiling in water till it is soft enough to be easily bruised between the thumb and fingers, and the boiling causing it to swell till the farina splits the enveloping membrane, and this they term bursting. Although it is the general opinion that burst grain is better than when it is dry for fattening poultry, this opinion has not probably been established on accurate experiment. Be this as it may, it is of no less importance to ascertain whether there is any difference of expense in feeding poultry on raw or boiled grain; that is, under similar circumstances, fowls eat more or less of the one or the other.

In order to ascertain this we had two quarts of corn boiled till well burst, and found that the increase in bulk was over four quarts. Buckwheat is increased in bulk by boiling more than any other grain, as two quarts, when well boiled, increased to seven quarts; yet it is no benefit to boil buckwheat, for the fowls consumed the seven quarts of the boiled grain nearly in the same time which two quarts of the raw grain would have sufficed them. Many have the impression that it is rather unsubstantial food.

Corn, on the other hand, is more profitable when boiled than when given raw, for the fowls, which would have consumed two quarts of the uncooked or raw corn, consumed only three quarts of the boiled grain, which are not equivalent to three pints of raw. Even calculating that they were to consume three quarts a day of the boiled grain, there would be a saving of one fourth. In very cold weather it should be fed to the fowls hot, and the water in which it was boiled may be given them to drink.

Barley is also much more economical when boiled than raw, for fowls which would have eaten two quarts of raw a day, ate three quarts of boiled grain. Therefore, as five quarts of boiled barley are produced from two quarts of raw, three pints are equivalent to no more than six fifths of a pint of the raw; consequently the expense in raw barley is to that of boiled as ten fifths to six fifths—that is, as ten to six—showing a saving of two fifths by giving boiled instead of raw barley.

Oats, though increased in bulk by boiling nearly one half, are not more than rye rendered more sufficing; for the fowls which in two days would have eaten two quarts of raw oats consumed in the same time three and a half quarts of the boiled grain; consequently it is no saving to boil the oats.

Fowls prefer raw millet to that which has been boiled, though it would evidently be a saving in other respects to boil it, as boiling increases its bulk one half.

These experiments proved most clearly that in every case where the price of corn and barley readers it eligible to feed fowls therewith, there is considerable economy in never giving them grain raw, but well boiled, and there is no saving by boiling oats or buckwheat.

Recent Scientific Discoveries.

A Modification of Soret's Cement.—We have before mentioned Soret's cement, which is formed by making oxyd of zinc into a paste with a solution of chlorids of zinc. This paste quickly sets into a hard mass, which may be applied for stopping teeth and a variety of useful purposes. Dr. Tollens gives a cheaper form of the same cement, which may be used for stopping cracks in metallic apparatus, and cementing glass, crockery-ware, and other materials. He mixes equal weights of commercial zinc white and very fine sand, and makes the mixture into a paste with a solution of chloride of zinc having the density 1·26. The mixture sets rapidly, but allows plenty of time for its application. As it resists the action of most agents, it will be very useful in the chemist's laboratory.

Mallett's Process for Obtaining Oxygen and Chlorine.—A report, by M. Dumas, on Mallett's process for obtaining oxygen and chlorine on the large scale, which we described at page 128, vol. 86, deserves notice, since it completely confirms the statements of the inventor. We refer our readers to the place mentioned for a description of the process, and need only say here that, according to M. Dumas, 100 kilogrammes of protochloride of copper can be made to yield daily from 15 to 18 cubic meters of pure oxygen at a cost of from 50 to 60 centimes. Quite as successful results were obtained in the separation of chlorine from hydrochloric acid. The same amount of protochloride furnished chlorine for the daily production of 300 kilogrammes of chloride of lime. We hope the process will be adopted for utilizing the vast quantity of hydrochloric acid evolved from our soda-works, and now, for the most part, wasted.—Mechanics' Magazine.

WONDERS OF MODERN SURGERY.

The progress of modern surgery is most interestingly discussed in an article in the March number of the Atlantic Monthly:

"The first great and radical step in modern progress was the introduction of what the doctors call anæsthetic agents. Ether was brought into use on the 30th of March, 1846, by Dr. Morton, of Boston, who extracted a tooth from a man without pain, by first putting him under the influence of ether. Dr. C. Jackson, the geologist, claims to have made the first suggestion of ether, and did unquestionably suggest great caution in the use of it. Chloroform was discovered by Sir J. Y. Simpson, a surgeon of Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 4th of November, 1847. Now no operation of magnitude is performed without the aid of insensibility to pain, produced either by ether, chloroform, or some other anæsthetic agent.

"It seems that as far back as the thirteenth century the idea of painless operations was carefully considered, but, though treated of by one Theodoric, it was apparently laid aside as practically useless. The chief effort of the old surgeons was apparently to produce insensibility in the operator in inflicting suffering. By the local application of a sufficient degree of cold insensibility can be produced in any desired part, so that a man with a most exquisitely painful wound on his arm, or felon on his finger, can now look quietly down, in his perfect senses, upon the knife as it enters his own body and performs the most difficult operations without giving him the least pain. Modern science has constructed an instrument by which a vapor of ether, or other volatile substance, is thrown out in the form of spray; which so rapidly absorbs the natural heat of the parts of the body exposed to its operations as to produce perfect insensibility to pain without the loss of volition or consciousness. This evaporation is so potent that the great Faraday was able to produce ice in a red-hot crucible! Dr. Henry Bigelow, of Boston, has introduced the use of rhigolene, a product of petroleum, which is extremely volatile, and will freeze up the skin and textures beneath in a few seconds, fifteen degrees of cold below zero being easily produced in a few minutes.

"Artificial legs and arms are now manufactured which are light and have all the movements of natural joints, by means of springs, cords and wheels, and are so perfectly adapted to use that it is by no means easy to discover which is the natural and which the artificial limb, when the wearer is once used to wearing the work of art. One man boasts, 'I can carry an armful of wood quite handily,' or 'carry a pail of water with ease;' and another says, 'I was fitted with a pair of artificial hands, and can feed myself very well with them: also can write so as to be read.' Another declares he has driven a horse 'twenty miles, on the coldest day, without calling on his other hand for assistance.' This is a great improvement on the iron hook, which was the best substitute that old surgery could affix to the stump. These artificial limbs, however, are triumphs of mechanical ingenuity, rather than of surgery.

"A French surgeon has invented an instrument he calls the ecraseur, or crusher, to perform operations dangerous in surgery on account of the loss of blood from the smaller vessels, if performed with a knife. It is formed of a fine chain gathered into a loop, which incloses the part to be removed, and by turning a screw the chain is tightened till the parts are separated. The blunt chain so turns up or twists the ends of the blood-vessels that hemorrhage is prevented. A child was born with a tongue so much too long that it protruded three or four inches from her mouth, so that she could not masticate food, or shut her mouth, or speak. Yet, when about fifteen years old, under the influence of chloroform, the ecraseur was applied, the superfluous portion of the tongue removed, and now she talks, sings, and eats with ease.

"The eye is now examined by an instrument called the ophthalmoscope, by which the depths of the globe of the eye can be readily and fully explored, and through its aid a great deal of what has been written and conjectured about diseases of the eye has been found to be wrong. The intricate passages of the ear, the nose, the whole of the 'windpipe' and passages to the lungs, are now carefully explored. Perhaps one of the best results of modern science has been through what is called 'conservative surgery,' the rule of which is to save all that possibly can be saved from the amputating knife. Many of our brave soldiers complained of the reckless haste with which, in the late war, some surgeons would cut off arms and legs on account of trifling wounds. The complaint was often just. But one of the most distinguished surgeons in the world has lately written: 'At King's College it is rare to see an amputation; in nine cases out of ten excision (or the cutting out of the diseased portion of the limb) should be performed in its stead.' A poor boy at the West was caught under a falling log, and his leg broken, crushed, and twisted upon itself at right angles with his thigh, the bones protruding through the flesh, and no doctor near. He lived, and was, after weeks of suffering, taken to a hospital. Modern conservative surgery sawed off the protruding bones, turned the leg back again to its place, and put on an instrument to keep it of equal length with the other, and now that boy stands, runs and jumps with two sound legs, instead of amputating the limb, as the old-fashioned surgery would have done."

Whitefield's Power.—A striking feature in Whitefield's preaching was singular power of description. The Arabians have a proverb which says, "He is the best orator who can turn a man's ears into eyes." Whitefield seems to have had a peculiar faculty of doing this. He used to draw such vivid pictures of the things he was handling that his hearers could believe they actually saw and heard them. "On one occasion," says one of his biographers, "Lord Chesterfield was among his hearers. The great preacher, in describing the miserable condition of an unconverted sinner, illustrated the subject by describing a blind beggar. The night was dark and the roads dangerous. The poor mendicant was deserted by his dog near the edge of a precipice, and had nothing to aid him in groping his way but his staff. Whitefield so warmed with his subject, and enforced it with such graphic power, that the whole auditory was kept in breathless silence, as if it saw the movements of the poor old man; and at length, when the beggar was about to take the fatal step which would have hurled him down the precipice to certain destruction, Lord Chesterfield actually made a rush forward to save him, exclaiming aloud, 'He is gone! he is gone!' The noble lord had been so entirely carried away by the preacher that he forgot the whole was a picture."

Powerless Gods.—A Chinese god factory was visited by the Rev. Mr. Allen, a Methodist minister, and when he expressed his astonishment at the familiarity with which the workmen in clay treated the gods and goddesses of war, wealth, thunder, water, fire, mercy, revenge, they, with the utmost sang froid, replied that they were yet powerless, being destitute of the ling or 'spirit.' Those designed for toys, therefore, are never endowed with that living spirit, nor are the others until the time of their instalment as a reigning divinity. At that time, however, they are possessed of the 'ling,' by means of a small hole in the centre of the back, if the idol be diminutive, or a large, oblong one in the more august, in which there are deposited pearls, gems, or some of the more precious metals, such as gold and silver of various estimation. The hole is then closed and sealed, the god perfected, and henceforth worshiped, as well by his makers as those who are ignorant of his origin This fact will also assist us to account, at least in part, for the iconoclastic fury of the rebels. They were to despoil and destroy them, not so much because they loved the idol less, but because they loved the gold his back contained more.

A Dog Runs a Mole into a Hole and Turns up a Small Fortune.—A widow lady, residing near Ashland, Va., was rewarded on Saturday night by the finding of a treasure valued at over $1,900. During the latter part of the war, when Hanover was so frequently subjected to the visits of raiders, this lady placed in an earthen pot three gold watches, with chains attached, belonging respectively to herself and two daughters; five massive plain gold rings, two ditto brooches, nine ditto sleeve buttons, a gold snuff box, one dozen silver table spoons, one dozen tea spoons, a silver urn, teapot, cream jar and sugar dish, and several hundred dollars in $20 gold pieces. The jar was buried at night, very hurriedly, and the place marked, as it was thought, in a most unmistakable manner. Since the termination of the war every effort to resurrect the treasure proved unsuccessful until last Saturday, when strangely enough the hiding place was discovered by a dog, who ran a mole into a hole, which led directly to the earthen jar. It is somewhat remarkable that the lady kept the burial of the jar a profound secret, save among the members of her own immediate family. There was great rejoicing in the household on Saturday, particularly when it was discovered that the articles were all in a good state of preservation.

"JONES' PAPER."

When that sign of the Zodiac which presides over the human head is favorable, and the large planets are in perigee, and the moon full, and when other phenomena indicate its propriety, we sometimes ask an honest-looking man, who shows the least trace of literary appetency, if he would not like to subscribe to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE? We have heretofore felt safe in so doing. But a few days since we received a severe check from what seemed to be a promising case: "No," said he, "I read Jones' paper."

Newspaper men have long been curious to see the man that never subscribes himself, but lives off of Jones; who has been sending for, borrowing, reading, and absorbing more out of Jones' paper than Jones himself ever got, often reading it before Jones, and at the very time Jones would have read it. We did not see Jones, but understand that, between the failure in the mails and this neighbor, who never fails to send for it, he complains of not being able to read the paper until it is worn out, and is generally discouraged. This non-subscribing reader seemed to be a person of substance and of an inquiring turn of mind, but we had not the courage to press the matter—in fact felt that it would be of no use.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.—The house of J. W. Platt, 102 Camp street, corner of Poydras, advertises all varieties of fresh teas.

THREE LITTLE SPADES, by the author of "Dollars and Cents," etc. New York: Harper & Bros., 1868. 16mo., pp. 267. On sale at George Ellis', No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

This is a very beautiful little book, written to teach in a pleasant, beguiling way the art of planting and taking care of flowers: why it is that some young ladies succeed in setting out rose bushes and in getting seeds to come up, while others fail. It comes very opportunely within reach of a small company that we know, who are quite fond of flowers, but not much skilled in growing them.

JOHN NEWTON says: "If an angel were sent to find the most perfect man, he would probably not find him composing a body of divinity; but, perhaps, a cripple in the poor-house, whom the parish wishes dead; but humbled before God, with far lower thoughts of himself than others think of him."

THE IRISH CHURCH.

The vote upon the abolishment of the church rates of the Irish establishment was very decisive of that church, and may be of the fate of the Disraeli ministry. Mr. Gladstone's proposition was sustained by the large majority of fifty-six votes. Its importance as an entering wedge to the disestablishment of the English church was not overlooked by the Premier, and in this view he rallied the country squires and the strength of the Tory party, but could not prevent its final passage.

The Protestant Episcopal Church of Ireland is supported by a rent-charge paid yearly and raised from all, or nearly all, the land of Ireland. This is now paid in the first instance by the landlord, who receives it from the tenant. Until about forty years ago this payment was made by the tenant himself, and was received and levied by the clergymen in kind; that is to say, the clergyman was entitled to a tithe of the produce of the land, and he collected it in whatever manner he could. As the tenant farmers of Ireland are chiefly Roman Catholics, the enforcing this claim was unpopular and led to desperate brawls between the Protestant clergyman and his Catholic parishioners. Bailiffs, small detachments of soldiers, battles and other violent machinery were employed in levying this import. It gives us the philosophy of why it is that an Irishman hates Protestantism to the tenth generation. Tithes and Protestants are one and the same thing.

In the beginning of the reign of George IV this payment in kind was commuted to one in money—some relief. Upon the accession of William IV the number of Irish bishops was reduced from twenty-four to twelve; vestry-rates, taxes for keeping churches in repair, were abolished, and a considerable portion of church lands and a percentage from the incomes of the bishops and clergy were taken for church building and other purposes of the establishment. This income was placed under the management of a body of nobles and clergy, called Irish Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and amounted, from 1834 to 1865, to one million one hundred thousand pounds sterling. The main income of the Irish church is that from the landlord, and an allowance is made to him for collecting from the tenant of thirty per cent. This income amounted, for the year 1864, to £586,428 8s. 8d. Of this amount over fifty thousand pounds sterling was divided among the Irish bishops, and the balance among the clergy, numbering 1,510. To do away with this annual rent will of course be a severe disestablishment of the Protestant church of Ireland, but it will probably be a decided advantage in the end to Protestantism in Ireland.

BOOK NOTICE.

COUSIN JESSIE'S STORIES is the title of a beautiful little volume for young folks, recently issued by Messrs. Blelock & Co. The "stories" are by a Southern lady, and evidence a skill and excellence in the literary art that is rarely found in unpretending juvenile books. If it be a good test of the merits of a book for children that it readily catches their attention, and holds them to the page, then "Cousin Jessie's Stories" must be pronounced a decided success. Our little ones have been enjoying the exhilarations of Christmas over again while perusing "Christmas in the City" and "Christmas in the Country;" they have wandered delightfully with Robert Green to the Rainbow; while that "Fishing Excursion," with Uncle Tom as pilot and entertainer, suggests tempting visions of pic-nic baskets, fish-tackle, and big trout, to be realized some day. The style of the work is exceedingly chaste and even elegant, though sufficiently simple for any seven-year old. The life pictures are so well chosen, and are so true to nature, that to us old folks an hour spent with Cousin Jessie is pleasant and refreshing as a draught from the fabled fountain of youth. The work, when known, is destined to become a favorite with the children, and will doubtless rank with the most popular of its class.

NORTHERN MISSIONS IN LOUISIANA.

If we may credit one-half or even one-tenth of the reported successes of Northern missionaries, who write home from Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, we might "Take up the shovel and the hoe"

and proceed to bury all that is left in these States of Southern Methodism. Fortunately we happen to be down here among "the dead and the dying," and know exactly when to weep, with whom, and how much; an advantage that might be worth ten thousand dollars, if possessed by Northern Missionary Boards. "ONE THOUSAND JOINED" is certainly a very inspiriting heading to a newspaper article, and is enough to secure another year's supply from the mission committee of Mulberry street.—"A thousand members, with their presiding elders, pastors and churches, have recently dissolved their connection with another branch of the Methodist family, and have joined the mother church." Why did not the Rev. R. K. Diossy write a little more explicitly and state the name of the other "branch," and the color of that entire corps which has surrendered to the superior skill and merit of a missionary of the M. E. Church. He might have gone a little more into detail for the benefit of Bishop Daniel A. Payne, who could appreciate this "disposition to organic unity with the African Methodist Episcopal Church."—While the bishop opens his heart toward his dear brethren of Northern Methodism, she opens her mouth toward him and swallows down "one thousand" of his people at a single gulp. If that does not satisfy him she has somewhat more of the same sort of charity on hand:

"We solemnly hold that it would be of incalculable advantage to the South and the cause of Christianity therein if the Northern church should cease to be. Nor do we apply these remarks to the Methodist Church South only, but to what we know as the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Zion Methodist Church. When we consider the true interests of Christianity, we deny the right of these Methodist churches to maintain a separate organization."—Newman's paper.

The bishop of the African Methodist Church took much pains to protest against the action of the Commissioners of his church (to our last General Conference) because they affiliated too strongly with the M. E. Church South. He says:

To "execute" our proposals of peace and good-will, we commissioned our delegates. To these proposals, based upon the principles of justice, equality and truth, we restricted our erring delegates.

But alas! alas! for them and for us, over-leaping these boundaries they must lift the arm to strike a blow at the Methodist Episcopal Church! Is there a word in the proposals or in the commission authorizing such a deed? One shall look in vain to find it. What induced them so to act, I know not. They may have been goaded to it by the treatment of certain agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To me it always has been a cause of chagrin, because they were not sent to widen the breach between any church and ourselves, but, if need be, to imitate the example of the self-sacrificing Roman, and leap into the chasm, that it might be closed forever!—Letter to the Western Christian Advocate.

The peace-loving bishop was unnecessarily solicitous for the fortunes of the M. E. Church, and if he still feels the necessity of somebody's leaping into a chasm for unity's sake, we think he is in a fair way to be gratified when a "thousand" are going in at a single jump. The accredited and principal agent of the M. E. Church, its official organ in this city, solemnly "denies the right" of "the African M. E. Church" to maintain a separate organization in the South. So the Northern Methodist church is anxious to swallow up everybody, and the bishop of the African Methodist Church, for the sake of peace, is willing to see somebody swallowed up, at least in a figure of speech! We rather suspect that the Christianity of the colored bishop did not contemplate going quite so far as his white Northern brethren require. We advise him to at least look into the pit, and to ascertain before he goes down, spurs and all, whether it is likely to be "closed forever" by the sacrifice of a bishop, three commissioners and "one thousand" members, presiding elders and churches.

When the charitable bishop was writing to the Western Christian Advocate those long letters of brotherly warmth, he knew but little of that missionary spirit about to be kindled, which goes forth like the fire of the Bramble, to consume all that will not put their trust in its shadow. There is a good deal of simplicity in his view of the good fellowship of his white Northern brethren, and the "superior" civilization, not to say Christianity, of the "white man" in the North. He says:

"Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," we have lived and intend to live side by side with our white brethren, but with the full conviction that the civilization of the North is as superior to that of the South as the glory of the sun is above that of the moon—that the Christianity which opens the common school and the college to all, must be preferable to that which closes them against millions of men simply because they are of African descent.

He would be "quite willing" "to live side by side" with that superior civilization which opens the common school, etc.; no doubt, but that is just the thing that the missionary society of his Northern Methodist brethren is not willing he should do. If he prefers charity before life, they are with him; but if he wishes as a church to live, they "solemnly deny its right to a separate organization." Now let the bishop put that in his episcopal pipe and smoke it, in the spirit of charity.

This whole affair of "one thousand joined" exemplifies the real nature of this missionary work of Northern Methodism in the South. It strains to turn over the members of other churches to itself; with poor success among the whites, at least in Louisiana—in this city not exceeding ten white men, all told. The elements at work are those of confusion and destruction, and cannot command the favor of heaven. The blacks are swayed by bureaus, by bread and meat, and political herdsmen, and for the time being will fill the galleries of Dr. Newman's church, and would fill the body of the house if he would let them; but while he likes to see them swallowed elsewhere by the thousand, he cannot relish even a few of them in his own stomach.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, for April.—Bledsoe & Brown, Baltimore; 8vo., pp. 514. Contents: The Nature of Civil Liberty, Federal Policy and Northern Prisons, Salem Witchcraft, George Elliot as a Novelist, The Missouri Compromise of 1820, Gothic Architecture, The Earth and Earthquakes, The Evolution Hypothesis, School Readers, Anæsthesia, Maximilian—his Family and his Tragedy, Book Notices. Here we have meat for men. And we had rather go without meat during lent than do without the strong substance of this Review. Last week we published in the ADVOCATE an extract from the first article, a masterly statement of the false ideas which have been accepted by the world of metaphysicians as a true definition of "Natural Liberty," as well as a powerful analysis of what liberty truly consists. This article alone is doubtless the result of years of research and reflection. The next one, on Northern Prisons, etc., is a vindication of the charge which has been made against the treatment of prisoners by the Confederate government. It forever settles that question with the candid historian, and fixes the responsibility of the unnecessary and terrible sufferings of prisoners during the war upon the proper parties. We do not wonder that Northern papers and reviews are steadily ignoring the existence of this powerful champion of the truth, scientific, literary and political. Those people do not like the truth when it takes the conceit out of them, any more than the rest of the world. But we do not wish to make the impression that it is only as against Northern writers and thinkers that this Review is pre-eminent in power. The research, scholarship, taste, critical acumen, logical force and comprehensiveness of this periodical are of the highest order—fully equal to that of the Edinburg Review, when under the conduct of Jeffreys.

ELECTION RETURNS FROM THE PARISHES.

We learn that the vote in Calcasieu stands 86 for to 373 against the constitution; for Taliaferro 274, against 73 for Warmoth.

A gentleman writing from Washington parish on the 19th inst. says:

To the Editor of the N. O. Times: One precinct in this parish heard from—the Roberts precinct; 140 votes polled, 56 of whom were blacks and 84 whites. Every black man voted solid for Warmoth and constitution. The majority against the constitution and for Taliaferro was only 19. A very few whites only voted for the constitution. The above is reliable.

We have been furnished with a copy of the following dispatch:

MINDEN, LA., April 22.—Majority in Claiborne against the constitution (658) six hundred and fifty-eight. Democratic ticket elected.

Union parish about 600 against.

Washington, St. Tammany, Livingston and St. Helena give at least 800 majority against the constitution, and elect Democrats as follows: W. L. Thomnson, State Senator; Amos Kent, of St. Helena, Jacob Magee, of Washington, W. H. Peirce, of Livingston, and W. B. Hosmer, of St. Tammany, as Representatives. J. Q. A. Fellows, for Congress, from 700 to 1,000 majority. Taliaferro, for Governor, a considerable majority. E. P. Ellis, District Judge, by over 1,000 majority. Bolivar Edwards, District Attorney, by a large majority.

We copy as follows from the Clinton Patriot of the 18th:

Up to the time of going to press (Friday, 4 P. M.,) everything at the polls is quiet. We will give the official vote in extra as soon as received.

In East Baton Rouge 1,351 votes were cast for to 2,114 against the constitution, giving a majority of 763 against that instrument. The Advocate, of the 20th, says the majorities received by Taliaferro, Voorhies, Peralta, Giffen, Herron, Hardy, McDonald, Fellows, Stafford, and the judicial and parochial officers on the Democratic ticket, are about the same. J. E. Elam, Democrat, was elected Mayor; Tom Brady, Democrat, City Marshal; H. L. Wolf, Democrat, Assessor, Treasurer and Collector; Messrs. J. R. Hackney, M. Granary, John O'Connor, John L. Wolf, J. C. Bogel, R. D. Wilson, Brown, Williams and Flournet, all Democrats, were elected selectmen of the First and Second Wards.

We copy as follows from the Advocate of the 20th:

West Baton Rouge—The following majorities were given against the constitution: Sardine Point 4, Brusle Landing 109, Court House 69.

Livingston.—We have no direct return from this parish, but learn incidentally that it has given 560 majority against the constitution.

West Feliciana.—We learn that our people made no effort in West Feliciana, and that the constitution was carried in that parish by 600 majority.

Lafourche and St. Landry are reported to have gone Democratic. This is a great gain.

East Feliciana.—Port Hudson precinct has gone against the constitution. Midway is very close. Advices from Clinton state that our friends worked hard there. The parish gives 91 majority for the constitution.

Pointe Coupee.—Reports encourage us in the hope that we will not have a heavy majority against us in this parish. Red River Landing precinct, which was expected to go Radical, gave a Democratic majority.

The last news from this parish is, that it has given 200 majority against the constitution.

Avoyelles.—Has given a majority against the constitution.

St. Bernard.—Is reported a tie, which is most unexpected good news, as a heavy registered majority was on the books against us.

Ascension.—The vote is reported very close in this parish.

Iberville, St. James, St. John, St. Charles.—Have gone for the constitution.

St. Landry.—Opelousas, Washington, Ville Platte, Arnaudville Junction, Bayou Boeuf, Waxia, Chism, and Big Cane, in this parish, gave 117 majority against the constitution. The precincts to hear from will increases this majority.

THE RAILROAD ACROSS THE CONTINENT.—By the close of this year it is estimated fully 1,200 miles out of the 1,700 between Omaha and Sacramento will be traversed by the locomotive. The time between New York and San Francisco will be reduced to ten days. Both ends of the great national line are making gratifying progress, and under their respective powerful companies the prospect for a continuous all-rail connection across the continent in 1870 is favorable.

It appears there will be no lack of funds for the prosecution of the great work with the utmost vigor. Beside the gift of public lands along the route, and the loan of government bonds to a large extent, and the other cash resources of the corporation, the property itself furnishes an excellent security for investments of private capital. The Central Pacific Railroad Company, building the Western half, it will be seen by our advertising columns, are offering their six per cent. gold bonds, based on the first mortgage of the road and equipment, at their par value and accrued interest. It is now generally conceded that the Pacific Railroad line is to be one of the most prosperous, valuable and enduring properties in the country.

THE DYING HOURS OF BUNSEN

One of the most learned men of modern times was Bunsen, a great author and Prussian ambassador to England. In the Christian Register we find this interesting sketch:

His sufferings were severe, but his faith and courage were not shaken. He wished to live longer, with the view of completing his literary works. When his physician told him, definitely, that his life was so near to a close, and that all his plans and arrangements and hopes of this world must be abandoned, he arose from his seat and uttered the following words: "O God, into thy hand I commend my spirit." He called his dear ones and revealed to them his feelings. He spoke of his wife in the most endearing terms, and gave to his children, one after the other, his parting blessing. He prayed with a solemn voice, "O God, bless my friends and my dear native land." With thankful recognition he mentioned his dear and faithful friend Niebuhr, who first introduced him into public life, and remained true to him to the end. He addressed his faithful servant, who nursed him with self-denial and tender attachment, and thanked him heartily. Then he spoke of his past public career; how frequently he manifested his infirmities; but he indicated his future hopes also.

"The richest experience of my life has been the knowledge of Christ. With love and benevolence toward humanity I leave this world; I bear no malice in my heart toward any one."

"O, what bliss it is to look down from that eminence of our past life. Here on earth our path is frequently obscure; but upward it grows brighter. I am already in thy kingdom, Lord, of which, previously, I have had a mere forecast only."

"How beautiful are thy mansions, O my God!" When he spoke those words his face was radiant with heavenly glory.

The uncommon lustre of the setting sun drew his attention. Taking a glimpse through the window, he said, "O, how beautiful! The love of God shines through all things." Then he turned to those present and said, "God bless you forever! My end is nigh, and I have an ardent longing to depart; let us depart in Christ. God is love and desiring to give love. Christus recognoscitur; Christus est; est Christus victor. To live for Him is to conquer. There is no death in God; I see Christ, and through him I see God. Christ sees us, and he must become all in all; I die in peace with all humanity."

These words he uttered alternately in English, French, Latin and German. "Those who live in Christ, in the love of Christ, are his, but those who live not in the love of Christ are none of his."

"Clearly do I see that we are all sinners; we have nothing if we have not Christ in God. We have life only so far as we live in God. Sinners as we are, in God we have eternal life. Christ is the son of God, and we are only so far the children of God as the spirit of the love of Christ dwells within us." These were the last words of Bunsen. He died on the 28th day of November, 1860.

HIGH WATER.—The water is now running through Grand Levee crevasse, and the Grosse Tete country is said to be again flooded. The water in the Teche is rising slowly.

Lessons from an Old Merchant.

That veteran and honorable merchant, Jonathan Sturgess, of New York, at the dinner given in his honor, on the occasion of his retirement from active business, gave the following golden counsel to young men:

"Now, gentlemen, since there is nothing that I can talk about that you do not understand a great deal better than I do, I propose to say a few words for the benefit of the young men outside, and if you approve of what is said, let it be considered as said by this grand jury of merchants now assembled.

"One of the first lessons I received was in 1813, when I was eleven years of age. My grandfather had collected a fine flock of merino sheep, which were carefully cherished during the war of 1812-15. I was a shepherd boy, and my business was to watch the sheep in the fields. A boy, who was more fond of his books than of sheep, was sent with me, but left the work to me, while he lay in the shade and read his books. I finally complained of this to the old gentleman. I shall never forget his benignant smile as he replied, 'Never you mind, if you watch the sheep you will have the sheep.' I thought to myself: what does the old gentleman mean? I don't expect to have any sheep. My aspirations were quite moderate in those days, and a first rate merino buck was worth $1,000. I could not make out exactly what he meant, but I had great confidence in him, as he was a judge, and had been to Congress in Washington's time; so I concluded that it was all right, whatever he meant, and went out contentedly with the sheep. After I got to the field I could not get that idea out of my head. Finally, I thought of my Sabbath lesson: 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.' Then I understood it: Never you mind who else neglected his duty; be you faithful and you will have your reward! I do not think it will take many lads as long as it did me to understand this proverb.

"I received my second lesson soon after I came to this city, as a clerk to the late Luman Reed. A merchant from Ohio, who knew me, came to purchase goods of Mr. Reed. He expressed his gratification at finding me there, and said to me—'You have got a good place. Make yourself so useful that they cannot do without you.' I took his meaning quicker than I did the proverb about the sheep. Well, I worked upon these two ideas until Mr. Reed offered me an interest in his business.

"The first morning after the copartnership was announced Mr. James Geery, the old tea merchant, called to see me, and said to me: 'You are all right now; be careful who you walk the streets with.' That was lesson number three.

"In this connection I must repeat an anecdote told of the late Robert Lennox. A country merchant came into the store of Mr. Morton, a highly respectable Scotch merchant, to purchase goods. He spoke about credit, references, etc. Mr. Morton said: 'I will give you what credit you wish.' 'But,' said the merchant, 'I am an entire stranger to you.' Mr. Morton replied, 'Did I not see you at church with Robert Lennox?' 'Yes, I was at church with him.' 'Well, I will trust any man whom Robert Lennox will take to church with him.'

"I hope these three lessons of watchfulness over the interests of their employers, watchfulness over their partner's interests and their own, after they are joined, followed by intense watchfulness that no black sheep creep into their folds, may be impressed by these anecdotes upon the minds of those for whom they are intended.

"One other lesson I feel it very necessary to inculcate—that of patience.

"With a little patience most young men will find a position as high as they have fitted themselves to fill.

"In all the changes which have taken place in my firm since 1822, no partner has been brought in who has not served as a clerk in the establishment. And I now leave my house well organized, prosperous, free from complications, still in the hands of those who have served it as clerks for a longer or shorter period. I mention this as an encouragement to young men to persevere in the faithful performance of their duties."

King Theodore's Personal Power.

Gen. Merewether received letters, dated January the 19th, from Magdala to-day. The prisoners are well, hopeful and in good spirits. They say that Theodore could not be at Magdala in less than a month and a half, counting from the date of their letter—that would give us just time, could we only start at once from here, to get there before him. It is most tantalizing, but I fear there is no chance of the advanced division moving on from here under ten days. It is still possible that Theodore may not march straight on Magdala. The people have an idea that he means to meet and fight us. I do not myself believe it. It is more probable that he may go out of his way to strike a blow against Waksh um Gobayzie, and, by defeating him, regain his lost prestige, and crush a man likely to become an ally of ours. That would be good generalship on his part; if successful, it would greatly strengthen him, and restore confidence to his army.

If such a fortunate thing occurred as that Gobayzie defeated him, all would then be over. I do not believe even the infatuated slaves who now remain with him would continue faithful after that. It is quite past comprehension how it is that he has not long since been murdered by his soldiers. The atrocities he commits are awful, and are perpetrated against his own followers; even women are not spared, some having been put to death in the most barbarous manner. They were tied up in skins—then the skins were drenched in oil and set on fire. The other day he ascended a hill, and calling his troops around him, addressed them, brandishing his spear: "You miserable wretches," said he, "I know what you are; if you only dared, there is not one of you who would not kill me; but you are cowards, and dare not; before that should happen I would kill you all with my own hands. Thus I would treat you," he said, and turning round, flung his spear at the nearest man, and transfixed him, killing him on the spot.

There he stood, unarmed, among them. And what did they do? Instead of rushing upon him, they bowed themselves to the ground, and said they were his slaves, and that he might do to them as he thought fit. Such is the extraordinary influence that this man has gained over the minds of the people by his iron will and indomitable energy and courage—great qualities, of which he is undoubtedly the possessor. Strength of will and firmness of purpose make themselves felt in all countries; but here, among the indolent, apathetic and credulous natives, the effect is of course greater, and those about Theodore appear to look upon him with almost superstitious awe.—Letter from Camp near Antale, Feb. 17.

MORTIFICATION is the soul's vigorous opposition to self, wherein sincerity is not evident.—Owen.

MARRIED.

By Rev. P. A. Johnston, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Matthew Broom, April 9, 1868, Mr. GEO. B. FORD, of Copiah county, Mississippi, to Miss MATTIE BROOM, of Hinds county, Mississippi.

At Americus, Mississippi, on the 8th of April, by the Rev. C. W. Calhoun, Mr. WILLIAM J. RAMSEY to Miss SARRA DAVIS.

OBITUARIES.

Brother JEFFERSON WEST was born in East Tennessee, January 24, 1802, and died at his residence, in Shelby county, Alabama, March 22, 1868, in full prospect of a glorious reward in heaven. He was a son of the Rev. Dr. Joshua West, who was one of the first planters of Methodism in this country, and whose memory is as "precious ointment" to our older settlers. The subject of this notice was converted to God and joined the M. E. church in 1826. He was married to Miss Mary A. Brown in 1827. I had been acquainted with him for seven years, and thought his life as free from blemish as any man I ever knew. His neighbors looked on him as a model of consistent piety. He loved the church. He rejoiced in her prosperity and wept over her decline. He could truly say:

"Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways."

He said to me on his dying bed that he had been a member of the church forty-one years, and, unworthy as he felt himself to be, no brother had ever laid aught to his charge. He was a class leader for nearly forty years, which place he filled with great acceptability and usefulness. He laid great stress on family religion.—He stated, on the Sabbath previous to his death, that for forty years he had not once neglected family prayers when able to be out of his bed. As the result, nearly all of his large family of sons and daughters are consistent members of the church, and one of his sons a member of the Montgomery Conference. His last illness was severely afflictive, suffering, as he was, from disease of the heart. But it was borne with great fortitude and patience. When his strength was sufficient he conversed with great composure of mind, and much Christian confidence, on the past, present and future. His last hours displayed, in a wonderful manner, the power of the Christian religion to sustain its subjects in affliction and death.

On the holy Sabbath morning, just before the day dawned—I suppose about the hour the holy angels descended and rolled back the stone from the sepulchre of Jesus—his spirit left its tenement of clay, to enter the Sabbath of eternal rest.

R. S. WOODWARD.

FLORENCE CHRISTINE, daughter of the Rev. William and Sallie Wadsworth, of the Mississippi Conference, was born August 15, 1864, and died March 30, 1868.

Weep not, fond parents, for thy child that is gone,
On angel wings lightly her spirit was borne
From the sorrows of earth to the joys above,
To meet with the Saviour and bask in his love.

RAILROAD ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, are authorized by acts of Congress to construct, with the aid and supervision of the United States Government, the western and principal portion of the National Trunk Line between the Pacific coast and the Mississippi valley. They have built by far the most difficult and expensive portion of their road, and have an unprecedented working force extending the track across the Salt Lake basin. By the close of 1868 it is expected they will have 400 miles in full operation, and that

THE ENTIRE LINE WILL BE COMPLETED IN 1870.

More than Twenty Millions of Dollars have been expended in the work, and the construction resources are ample for the remainder. They consist of

1. United States Bonds to the extent of $35,000 per mile, average, delivered as the work progresses.

2. First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, issued also according to the progress of the road, and having the preferred claim—superior to that of the Government.

3. Grant of Public Lands along the route, 12,800 acres per mile, or nearly ten million acres in all, which are now selling at the minimum rate of $2 50 per acre.

4. Capital stock of $20,000,000, of which $5,000,000 is subscribed and paid on the work done.

5. Cash resources, comprising donations from California sources amounting to $1,250,000, net earnings, etc., 1865 to 1870, $6,500,000, making a total of more than

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE ELDEST GIRL.

Maria is the eldest girl,
And though but ten years old,
Her mother says of her with pride,
"She's worth her weight in gold."

She's thoughtful, kind, industrious;
She'll never disobey;
But good example ever sets
At home from day to day.

She'll dust and tidy up the room,
To help and cheer her mother,
And softly rock the little cot,
To soothe her baby brother.

At every sort of needlework
Maria's quick and clever.
For she can sew, and darn, and knit,
And idle she is never.

When father's come how glad she is,
For he is mild and tender;
He knows who pulls his slippers out
To warm beside the fender.

Why is this little girl so good,
Her daily help so ample?
Because the noblest mark's her aim,
For Christ is her example.

Ye little girls, when duty calls,
But selfishness enfolds you,
The Lord who lived, and worked, and died,
With pitying love beholds you.

Be faithful to that Master kind,
Through every toil and [illegible]
Then for your brow shall wait a crown
In heaven's glorious morrow.

SPRING.

The almond-trees had been in flower ever since January, and the children made nosegays of them without much troubling themselves about the almond-harvest of the proprietor of the house. Madame Bessard was no longer satisfied with strolling about the garden, but took rides on the back of an ass. The donkey-chair had been returned to its owner, but the beast itself was established under a shed, and a little boy in the neighborhood came to groom it of mornings and to feed it at night.

This boy was a sort of gipsy. One day, when Lucie was going out with her father, she perceived the little fellow standing at the garden-door; he asked charity in a voice so weak that she was touched with compassion, and begged permission to fetch him a bit of bread from the kitchen. As soon as he saw it he trembled all over, then darted upon the morsel like a wild beast, and devoured it in a fashion which showed plainly he had told the truth when he said he had eaten nothing for two days.

From this time the little gipsy conceived the warmest attachment to Lucie. He declared she had saved his life, and there was nothing he would not do for her.

The loveliest mountain flowers, the greenest branches, the prettiest and most polished stones from the bed of the stream, he gathered and brought as offerings to his benefactress. In return, Lucie often gave him something to eat; and M. Bessard found for him a few clothes as substitutes for the miserable rags he had on when they first made his acquaintance.

The poor child might be seven or eight years old. He said he had neither parents nor friends; that as long as he could remember he had traveled about with a troop of people who lived under a tent, under bridges when the streams beneath were dried up, or by river-sides. Two months ago he had hurt one of his feet, and not being able to walk, the gipsies had left him behind. Since then he had wandered about the country begging his bread, stealing it when not given to him, and often on the point of dying of hunger, as he was on the day when he met Lucie.

'Papa,' said she, one day, 'Zach' (this was the name the little gipsy called himself)—'Zach actually does not know that there is a God.'

'I do not wonder, my child; many children in the world know no more; and many people live as if they neither know it or believed it.'

'But how can we teach Zach? We must not leave him in this heathenish state.'

'Assuredly not. Try to read to him some verses out of the New Testament, about our Lord's life and miracles, and see if he can understand it at all. Do not read straight on; it will be above his comprehension; all he needs to understand is that God loves us, and sent His Son upon earth to save sinners.'

The result of this conversation was, that Lucie undertook to instruct Zach—a difficult task. She could not fix his attention. He wished to obey Lucie and listen to her; but it was almost impossible for him to remain five minutes in the same place, or give his mind consecutively to the same thing. When he was read to he fell asleep; he could not comprehend half the words in the book; and at last Lucie, in despair, said to her mother:

'I must give up reading the Bible to Zach; it only wearies him, and does him no good whatever.'

'Have patience, my child; it is a pity to give up so soon. What do you think interests him most?'

'I don't know—perhaps the stories.'

'Well, if God has given him sense enough to take in the stories, it seems to me that a little girl might take the trouble to read and explain them to him. What do you say, my daughter?'

Lucie did not reply; conscience-stricken, she determined to try hard to be useful to poor Zach.

So the readings continued; and when Lucie found them beyond her pupil's comprehension she re-translated them into the simplest words possible. Zach learnt by degrees to sit still; he even ceased to dart off and climb up into the almond-tree for a flower that struck his fancy. According as the story advanced his attention became riveted more and more; when Lucie came to the chapter which told of our Lord's Passion he never took his eyes from her face, and seemed to devour every word. At the story of the crucifixion he burst into sobs and cries.

'They have killed Him! they have killed Him! I thought to the last that He would have spoken a word and destroyed them all. Ah, if I had been there I would have died with Him. I know he would have been good to poor Zach.'

Touched and troubled by an emotion which to her was wholly unexpected, Lucie tried to make the boy understand how Jesus Christ rose again, how He ascended into heaven, where He was always ready to help those who prayed to Him, and would be ready to help poor Zach. Zach listened, but he always went back upon the same words, 'They killed Him; and He let them do it.' And he went away, repeating this over and over again.

But henceforward Lucie had no more reason to complain of Zach's inattention. Seated on the ground, his hands folded round his knees, and his great black eyes fixed on his young teacher, he listened greedily and never forgot a single word. Love of the Lord Christ had taken full possession of the poor little ignorant soul; and Lucie never ceased to be thankful that she had gone patiently on. Likewise in her inmost heart she was not sorry for his devoted and exclusive affection for herself.

For two days Zach had disappeared from his duties. Annette, who had a kindness for him, though she abused him pretty well sometimes, committed to Gothon the feeding of the ass, and declared that Zach had gone to rejoin his friends, the gipsies. Nevertheless she listened for every step about the house, hoping it was the light leaping footstep of the young vagabond.

'Here he is at last!' cried she, one Friday morning.

It was in truth Zach, carrying in his arms an enormous nosegay of white heath.

'Is Mademoiselle Lucie at home?' asked he of Annette.

'Yes, surely; where else should she be? She wasn't likely to run after you, that I know of? A pretty business you have made of it, absenting yourself for two days, and leaving your work upon our hands!'

Zach was accustomed to hard words, even to blows, which latter he never got from Annette, so he contented himself from creeping out of her way to the drawing-room door, and there knocking timidly.

'Mamma,' cried Lucie, springing from her seat, 'here is Zach! Oh, Zach, where did you get these beautiful flowers?'

Zach explained that he had brought them from the peninsula of Gien; he heard they were in flower there, and he thought he would fetch mademoiselle a nosegay.

'And what a nosegay! And such a distance you must have gone for it! It has taken you two whole days.'

'Yes, mademoiselle.'

And the little gipsy, approaching the sofa, knelt down before Madame Bessard, and kissed her hand, a habit he had, which it was in vain to try to break him of; he looked so unhappy whenever he was prevented from testifying his respect in his own peculiar way.

In the evening Lucie again called her mother's attention to the beautiful white heath.

'Zach says, mamma, that the plants grow as tall as trees. I wish papa would take us to the peninsula of Gien. You might come, too, perhaps; you are strong enough now?'

'No, my darling; I wish to economize all my strength for my journey home, and my duties there, since God in his mercy allows me to return.'

'Mamma, were you afraid of never returning?'

'Afraid? no; for I left all in God's good hands; but I felt very ill when I first came here, my child.'

Lucie could not answer. She clasped her mother in her arms, and kissed her passionately.

'Mamma, my own mamma, how good is God to have made you well again!' said she, in a low voice.

'Since He has left us together still, my daughter, let us serve Him all the more.'

Lucie never forgot these words of her mother.

'Who'll come with me to the peninsula at Gien?' said M. Bessard, one day. 'I mean to be off thither the first thing to-morrow morning.'

Lucie and Gustave were eager to go; Pauline proposed staying at home with her aunt, as it was such a long distance.

'No, no,' cried Lucie. 'I'll stay at home. I'll not give up my place beside mamma to anybody.'

Madame Bessard said that Annette would take care of her, and that she would be glad of the opportunity to do many things which she had too long neglected.

'I assure you, mamma,' answered Lucie, blushing, 'you will find nothing in disorder.'

'You mean,' said M. Bessard, 'that this will be a good opportunity for fatiguing yourself quite at your ease. I forbid it absolutely. Take your book—or write to your sons—you shall do nothing else.'

'Nothing over much, I promise; so be content. Have you got a donkey?'

'Yes; and the lazy ones may ride him, turn and turn about.'

So, before six o'clock next morning they were all on the march—this merry troop who had so much cause for content and thankfulness. The road was charming though very long; but once arrived at the forest of heath, the joy of the children knew no bounds. Even their tall papa was hidden by the height of the plants—every minute some one was lost sight of, and found again. They made huge nosegays with which they stuffed the ass's paniers, now emptied of provisions. Lucie particularly devoted herself to the gathering of anemones, blue, red and lilac, which made a perfect carpet underneath the stems of heather. Then the sky was so blue, the air so pure. She left her flowers a moment and came to lean upon her father's arm.

'How beautiful everything is!' said she, softly. 'What a pity mamma is not here!'

'Yes; she loves a fine view. But for me, the finest view in the world is to see your mother with her rosy cheeks and her healthy vigorous air.'

'How good God is to us, papa.'

'Yes, my child, infinitely good.'

And the father and daughter stood with their eyes fixed on the sea, which neither of them saw, for tears.

The return was less lively than the departure. Pauline was tired and a little dolorous; Gustave wished to lead the ass upon which she rode; but as he always led it into the ruts, his father took the bridle out of his hand, which extremely annoyed the susceptible and easily offended Gustave. For Lucie, she marched on courageously and uncomplainingly by her father's side.

On approaching Hyeres everybody revived. Madame Bessard was quite surprised to see her wanderers return so soon; but dinner was nearly ready, to the great satisfaction of the children. Lucie had just time to arrange her flowers in the vases; then, at half-past eight everybody went thankfully to bed, Gustave having been already asleep for half an hour on his chair.

FARM AND GARDEN.

From the Clinton (La.) Patriot.

RICE AND RICE CULTURE.

MR. EDITOR: During the past few days I have been traveling through the country, visiting many planters at their residences. Everywhere are indications of the ravages of the late war and the changed condition of our labor system, but with all whom I visited there appeared to be more hopefulness as to the future than I expected to find. All seem to be moving with energy and determined to accomplish all that can be under the circumstances in which we are placed. The freedmen are working better, thus far, than what they did last year. Gaunt hunger staring them in the face has probably influenced them to this result.

The special object of my trip was the feasibility of upland rice culture in the vicinity of Clinton. In pursuit of this object I called upon some of the oldest and most experienced planters in our parish, and others in Wilkinson county, Mississippi. All, with but one exception, concur in the opinion that an effort to raise rice, for home consumption and a surplus for shipment, can be made a triumphant success; the only difficulty being the cleaning of the rice after it has been raised. To obviate this difficulty I would state that I have made definite arrangements with, and will put up for, Adams & Brothers, at their well known mill, one and a half miles from Clinton, a large mill for cleaning rice—built on the principle of the Georgia and Carolina rice mills. This mill will be completed and in successful operation by the time that rice is ripe this fall, and Adams & Brothers will be fully prepared to clean all rice that may be sent them, either for toll or cash, as may be preferred by those who have rice to be prepared for use. They will also be prepared to thrash all rice that may be sent to them in the straw.

OF ITS CULTURE.

There are three grades of land in this section of the country that will produce rice successfully. First, our high and dry pine wood, land fresh cleared, and if forest trees are scattered thinly through it they will be no detriment to the crop. Second, all the bottom land along the banks of the streams that has not been cultivated long enough to render it dull and heavy. Third, and best of all, is that grade of land known as overflowed or marsh land, that has been considered too wet to be successfully cultivated in cotton or corn. Of this grade there are hundreds of acres in the immediate vicinity of Clinton that might be successfully cultivated in rice, that is now lying idle.

THE METHOD OF PLANTING.

The best way is to plant in hills, one foot apart, in rows from one half to three feet apart and with from four to six grains in a hill. More is not good. This will allow the cultivation to be done with the plow and hoe, and obviate the necessity of hand working. The yield, planted and cultivated in this manner, is but little, if at all, less than when planted in the continuous drill, and the rice is much better and cleans much easier, being decidedly larger in both head and grain.

TIME OF PLANTING.

Rice should be planted about the same time as cotton, and need not be planted earlier, say from the 10th of April until the 1st of June.

WORKING THE CROP.

Use the plow and hoe freely, scraping, barring off, scraping again and moulding, keeping the crop as free from grass and weeds and the ground as thoroughly pulverized as possible, until the rice quite thoroughly shades the ground, from which time until it ripens it will take care of itself.

HARVESTING.

Rice should never be cut until it is all thoroughly ripe, as it is only then that it is fully perfect. If cut before this it is not only imperfect but it is almost an impossibility to clean it so as to be saleable or fit for use. To cut it the grain sickle should be used, unless the straw is very short, in which case the grain cradle can be used to advantage. After cutting bind firmly with bands of the rice straw in bundles of size convenient for handling, cut when dry and keep dry as possible.

THRASHING.

This can be done cheaply and successfully on a plank floor with the flail. This instrument any one with but a small amount of mechanical skill can both make and use.

YIELD PER ACRE.

This crop, like all others, varies in the amount produced, owing to quality of land, manner of culture, season, etc. Many crops of rice are badly injured by being planted too thick, using too much seed and letting too much stand on the ground. One peck, or even less, is abundance for one acre. Do not plant too thick, as rice, like some other kinds of grain, stools largely, sending up from ten to twelve stalks. The yield in this part of the South has been from twenty to one hundred bushels of rough rice per acre.

In conclusion I would say that there is nothing in the way of raising, with great profit, almost an unlimited amount of rice in the vicinity of Clinton. Some planters upon whom I called are preparing to plant, some ten, some twenty, and some as high as thirty acres. Let many others do likewise, and next year let the planters count up their acres of rice as the Northern farmers do their wheat, by the hundred. All facilities for cutting, thrashing and cleaning, and that cheaply and successfully, will be on hand.

Respectfully, etc.,
JOHN J. MILLER.

HOW TO MAKE HOME HAPPY.—It is not the imposing majesty of a sumptuous mansion, nor the hollow glare of gaudy furniture, nor the obsequious attention of servants that makes the blessedness of home. No; it is the steady exercise of those holy charities that soothe our sorrows, and that build the nest of peace, love and true enjoyment in our bosoms. It is mutual respect and attention, a kind consideration of each other's feelings, under all circumstances—a sympathy in our cares, a regard to our interests, the exercise of a patient and forbearing and forgiving temper, that makes home the "only Paradise that has survived the fall." And let it never be forgotten that even a smile or a frown may gild with brightness, or overcast with clouds, the whole horizon of that sacred spot—home.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Boremus, D D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field; collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not; to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.; by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades, and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them; according to that Scripture which says—"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a23 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus doubling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any one inclined, and to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1823.)

Warerooms, Nos. 641 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This Invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality; but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no very material change to notice in the general market since our last review. Better supplies of flour and grain, without any corresponding increase in the demand, causes the market for these articles to appear heavy and, perhaps, something easier, while for provisions, and particularly for pork, the demand is better, prices firmer, and increased animation is observed. In dry goods there is still a moderately fair business doing, and some of the grocers are meeting with a moderate patronage also The market for foreign sugar and molasses remains very dull, and the market is too bare of the product of Louisiana to permit of anything more than mere retail transactions.

Cotton.—In our last review we reported the cotton market as having been in an almost unprecedentedly inactive state during the three days previous, the unsatisfactory telegraphic accounts from Liverpool causing buyers to discontinue purchasing even at the modified prices which holders were then asking. The few inconsiderable lots which had changed hands, we remarked, were disposed of on the basis of 29c. for Good Ordinary, 30 to 30½ for Low Middling, and 31 to 32 for Middling. The market on Saturday gave no signs of recovering from the depression under which it had been laboring before, owing to the great discrepancy still existing between the views of buyers and sellers. The sales of the day only amounted to about 240 bales, with a drooping and irregular market, affording no reliable data upon which to base quotations. On Monday the telegrams, for which all parties were waiting, were rather late in reaching us, and the market in the meantime remained inactive. Only 670 bales changed hands during the day, prices continuing irregular, though as near as we could learn on the basis of 29 to 29½c. for Good Ordinary, 30 to 30½ for Low Middling, and 31½ to 32 for Middling. On Tuesday nothing occurred to relieve the market from the extreme dullness which characterized it for some days past. The sales amounted to but 675 bales, and prices did not exhibit any material change from those before paid. The telegrams during the day from Liverpool were not calculated to impart any activity to business here, as they reported that market as dull, with sales of only 8,000 bales, and prices lower, Uplands closing at 12⅛ to 12¼d. and Orleans Middling at 12⅜ to 12½d. Owing to the small amount of business done the sales for the three days barely sum up to 1,585 bales, and we find it somewhat difficult to adjust quotations, yet believe that those we give below very fairly represent the market.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,585 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening embrace 2,929 bales, against 2 970 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 41 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 563,601 bales, against 654,981 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 339,017 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 115,049 bales to Great Britain, of 48,534 to France, and of 121,296 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	29 to 29½

Sugar.—The season for the production of Louisiana being over, there is nothing doing excepting a limited retail business, at 13¾c. per lb. for Fair, 15½c. for Prime, 16 to 16½c. for yellow Clarified, and 17 to 17¼c. for white. Some lots of Cuba sugar were sold, but all the particulars are suppressed.

Molasses.—There is none in market from the coast. Refinery reboiled commands 75 to 85c.; Golden Syrup $1 to $1 10 per gallon. Cuba molasses is quoted at 46½c. per gallon by the cargo, and 50 to 55c. in lots.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected, from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 3 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 13, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Collier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose; till, hearing of Dr T S Collier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Collier can cure any case of Cancer.

A PRAYER.

Abba, Father, lo! thy child
Lifts his weary cry to thee;
Satan-tempted, sin-beguiled,
Lord, thy mercy show to me.

Jesus, author of my faith,
Still my elder Brother be;
From the everlasting death,
Oh! my Brother, save thou me!

Holy Spirit, Love of love,
Woo my wayward heart to thee;
Win my soul to home above;
Gracious Guardian, guide thou me.

Maker, Saviour, Comforter,
Whom have I in heaven but thee?
Leave me not a wanderer,
Abba, Father, keep thou me! C.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The Michigan Democrats gain seventy supervisors, and defeat negro suffrage by 40,000 majority.

A Democratic recorder is elected in Chicago by 921 majority.

House.—Nothing done.

Gen. Schofield is still here—his departure uncertain.

Correction.—There are no negroes among the new municipal officers of Alexandria, Va.

Impeachment continued.—Boutwell concluded, after which the court took a recess of ten minutes. Nelson, of Tennessee, spoke extempore. He alluded to the magnitude of the occasion, and found he lacked the ability to treat the subject. That the managers had charged Johnson with evil nature and wickedness, and characterized him as a detestable character, and accused the President of everything, from a great political criminal to a common scoundrel. Nelson gave the President's biography in refutation of these charges and aspersions. Those who, like Nelson, knew the President best, sustained him. Nelson felt that he was not addressing Senators as politicians, but as judges who would rise above the prejudice of party. He was confident the outside pressure would be indignantly repelled. If he believed conviction a foregone conclusion, humble as he was, he would scorn to address them. Nelson cited the resolutions offered by Johnson and adopted by Congress, immediately after the Bull Run disaster, declaring the purposes of the war, which are still unrepealed. To these resolutions Johnson was faithful. Lincoln's policy after Lee's surrender was based on those resolutions, which Johnson faithfully carried out. Congress claimed powers in the reconstruction acts by implication. The President's powers were more plainly implied. The President had a right to his own opinion. Honesty and integrity of motive must be presumed in such a case. Nelson claimed that Congress had justified the President's policy in the primary recognition of Virginia. Nelson argued the judicial character of the Senate, and denounced the claims of the managers that the Senate was a law unto itself and could convict on common fame, as dangerous to the country. Senators' oaths showed that they were bound by the laws. He denounced as grossly improper the managers' plea that the people thundered conviction, and that the public pulse beat fitfully while they delayed it.

Adjourned.

The Radicals are arrogant in their confidence of conviction. The atmosphere is full of it, and the most stubborn acquittal prophets are becoming shaky; still nothing tangible has transpired to strengthen one party or weaken the other.

Nelson's speech is regarded as admirable in its place. It deals with facts which must warm the hearts of those who fought for the Union toward Mr. Johnson. Nelson's Tennessee earnestness and pronunciation make the injudicious laugh, but he is listened to with profound attention, especially by doubtful Senators. His speech covers ground which no one else could safely tread. Nelson has been Johnson's life-time neighbor, and even the sneerers acknowledge the honesty of his rough logic.

The proceeds of the Elgin cotton has been ordered to be paid into the treasury, the Supreme Court having dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction. The amount involved is nearly half a million of dollars. The parties claiming the proceeds will apply to the Court of Claims.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—It is Gen. J. M. Schofield, commanding First Military District, whom the President has nominated Secretary of War.

Gen. Lovell H. Rousseau has arrived from Alaska, under summons as a witness for the defence.

Regular pools are opened at the fashionable gambling houses, where bets are made on all impeachment questions involving the final result—votes on interlocutory questions, and termination of the trial.

T. A. R. Nelson's speech is universally read and applauded; it is admirable. Rousseau left Sacramento on the 4th inst.

In the Senate the resolution that the proceedings of the court in retirement be published by the regular reporters in the usual way was postponed until Monday.

Chase thou ordered the prosecution to proceed. Stevens being absent, the prosecution asked time.

The defence then proceeded, and Groesbeck is now speaking. Weather is inclement.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—Groesbeck's speech is much praised. Thus far Tennessee and Ohio have made the most admired efforts on impeachment.

The machinery on foot regarding new rules and regulations will probably prolong the trial beyond the Chicago Convention.

It is stated that Wade's influence in the Convention, should he surely be President, is feared, and the result will be staved off.

Stevens and Williams will speak on Monday.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—Impeachment Court.—After the journal was read Chase said that Edmond's resolution ordering that the Senate's deliberations be regularly published was in order. Drake moved indefinite postponement. Sumner said that's the proper motion. Indefinite postponement was defeated, 20 to 27. Sumner submitted a motion that the vote on the several articles proceed at 12 on the day after the argument of the managers and counsel ceased. Objected to; goes over under the rules to Monday. Sumner proposed two additional rules—first, that Chase shall ask each Senator, how do you vote, and he shall reply guilty or not guilty. Second—That upon conviction it shall be the duty of the presiding officers to order the convict's removal forthwith. Objection. Matter goes over to Monday. Several Senators made points that these new issues would come into the Senate where interminable debate was allowable, postponing the result indefinitely. Chase ordered the argument to proceed. The prosecution not responding, Groesbeck commenced. He argued that the body he was addressing was a court—arguing from the Constitution—which permitted neither bills of attainder nor irresponsible tribunals, especially such as were laws unto themselves.—Lincoln's plain violations of the Constitution had been ratified by Congress because his motives were good. He then proceeded to argue that the first eight articles rested on whether the President had the right to remove Stanton and give Thomas ad interim appointment. He argued that had Mr. Lincoln lived, and had the tenure-of-office bill been passed in hostility to Lincoln, Lincoln, under its provisions, during his second term, could have legally removed a Cabinet officer appointed by himself during the first term, and that Stanton had infinitely less claim to tenure under Mr. Johnson's term. Groesbeck feared a few days' delay would not help him, and asked that he be allowed to proceed through. Circumstances compelled him to make important omissions in his argument. The President having consulted the advisers indicated by the Constitution, was guiltless of crime. It was comparatively useless to urge the unconstitutionality of the act with those who framed it; but granting its constitutionality, he denied the President's criminality. The President's oath of office required him to maintain the Constitution. Minor officers swore only to support it. Answering Boutwell—That the President was bound to execute all laws. Groesbeck inquired about the President's duty when the Supreme Court had decided a law unconstitutional? Groesbeck quoted from a large number of precedents, against which was alone the act of 1867, claiming there was abundant room for doubt and hesitation on the part of the President—sufficient, at least, to induce him to resist with the view of obtaining a judicial decision. Groesbeck asked whether the President was to be convicted and deposed because he had acted on the interpretation sanctioned by his constitutional advisers, by the Thirty-Eighth Congress, by the Supreme Court and by the uniform practice of the government. The evidence showed that the President acted in the public interest in removing Stanton, Groesbeck contended that the President's acquiescence in the tenure-of-office bill as long as possible was a point in the President's favor. (As Groesbeck proceeded he recovered his voice and held the floor and galleries spellbound.) Groesbeck concluding, expressed his confidence in the final result, and characterized the precedents of convictions referred to by the managers as rather beacon lights of warning than as examples for guidance. In conclusion, he pronounced a glowing eulogium upon President Johnson's life, character and services.

LONDON, April 27.—Afternoon.—Weather delightful, favoring the crops. The Abyssinian news improves the funnces.

Later Abyssinian dispatches state that Theodorus and his sons are prisoners, and that a great quantity of valuables was captured at the fortress of Magdala.

The English captives are en route for home.

The very latest reports from Magdala represent that fourteen thousand native troops laid down their arms. The interior of the fortress of Magdala presented an extraordinary and splendid sight, the place glowing almost with barbarous splendor. The British troops plundered it at once. The men found four royal crowns made of solid gold, and $20,000 in silver, thousands of silver plate, and lots of rich jewels.

Still later advices were received from Sydney to-day. Farrell, who attempted to assassinate Prince Alfred, was duly indicted, tried, found guilty, and sentenced to death.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The impeachment element appears less confident to-day than during last week.

House.—A bill was introduced to admit the State of Arkansas into the Union. Referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

Adjourned.

Senate.—In the court, after several propositions affecting final argument by Senators had been rejected by votes indicating that a majority desired to push the matter to a speedy conclusion, the whole subject was postponed until after the argument was concluded. Stevens then proceeded with his speech. After reading twenty minutes he broke down. Butler read the balance of Stevens's speech, which is very vindictive. He narrated the position of Senators on the tenure-of-office bill at length; Senators could not excuse its violation.

Manager Williams succeeded, and will occupy part of to-morrow.

After court the Senate received several executive messages, and adjourned.

Canby telegraphs Grant from North Carolina that, as far as heard from, there is 7,340 majority for the Constitution.

The President's message, regarding the department of the Atlantic, simply states that he established it in accordance with the usage of government.

The bill admitting Arkansas provides similar to that reported last March from the Committee on Reconstruction. The preamble asserts that Arkansas has formed and adopted a State government, republican in form, and therefore is entitled to representation as soon as the legislature ratifies the fourteenth article, and on condition that the Constitution shall never be changed to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote now entitled to do so by the Constitution herein recognized; nor so amended as to allow any person to vote who is excluded from office by the third section of the proposed fourteenth article, until the disability imposed is removed in the manner therein provided.

Stevens, alluding to Groesbeck, concluded: "The gentleman, on Saturday, implored the sympathy of this Senate with all the elegance and pathos of a Roman Senator pleading for virtue, and it is to be feared that his grace and elegance turned the attention of the Senate upon the orator rather than upon the accused. Had he been pleading for innocence his great power would have been well exercised. Had he been arguing with equal eloquence before a Roman Senate, and Cato, the censor, had been one of the judges, his client would soon have found himself placed in the middle of the forum, instead of receiving the sympathy of a virtuous and patriotic audience."

The Evening Star says: Impeachment stock, from some unfathomable cause, seems to have a slightly downward tendency to-day. There are rumors of a break in the line of Republican Senators, and four are named as certain to go against impeachment. On close inquiry, however, it cannot be ascertained that any one of the four has made any declaration, or given any indication to warrant such a conclusion. Still, the belief that the President's chances are improving is certainly afloat in the air.

LONDON, April 25.—Advices from Australia state that a Fenian named Farrell shot Prince Alfred in the back. The ball was extracted and Alfred was doing well, but had been sent home.

LONDON, April 25.—Evening.—The attempted assassination of Prince Alfred by the Fenian Farrell has produced the most profound excitement from one end of the nation to the other. The press teems with denunciation of the assassination, and among the people, with whom the Prince was a great favorite, the crime forms a great topic of conversation.

LONDON, April 23.—There was an immense meeting at Spurgeon's church this evening. John Bright presided and many distinguished persons spoke. Resolutions favoring the disendowment of the Irish church passed enthusiastically.

Late advices from Japan state that anarchy reigns in that country. The natives of Osaca captured the French corvette Duplex, and compelled all foreign agents, except the English, to lower their flags.

LONDON, April 28.—Both Houses of Parliament have voted addresses to the Queen regarding Alfred's injury.

Disraeli said that Napier's Abyssinian exploit is only equaled by that of Cortez in Mexico.

The House of Commons has resumed the Irish church question.

BERLIN, April 27.—The third session of the North German Parliament commenced to-day. King William of Prussia made the opening speech, and said to the members that their aim should be the mutual and material interests of Germany. He advised the fulfillment of treaties with Austria and Spain.

He hoped that a desire for national good would rule them in all their proceedings. He congratulated them on the peaceful and friendly local relations, and trusted that those of North Germany with the great powers of Europe would justify the belief that the maintenance of peace was the great and only object.

The speech was pacific throughout, and he concluded expressing the hope that during the present session, and in all events, he might count upon the united power of Germany.

His remarks were very favorably received. After concluding, he shook hands with the Bavarian minister. The latter called for three cheers, which were given, for the King.

LONDON, April 28.—House went into Committee of the Whole on the Irish church question. The first of Gladstone's series of resolutions was debated at length, but none of the prominent members took part in the discussion.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Court Continued.—The following is the text of Sumner's proposition:

Whereas, It is provided in the Constitution of the United States that on trials of impeachment by the Senate no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present; that the requirement of two-thirds is not extended to the judgment on such trials, which remain subject to the general law that a majority prevails. Therefore, in order that any question which may arise with regard to the judgment shall be determined by a majority of the members present:

The following is one of the sentences of Manager Williams' speech: Look at the bloody carnival of New Orleans, and show mercy to loyalty and innocence and not to treason.

After Williams concluded Butler explained the connection of the managers with the Alta Vela affair. Alluding to Nelson's reference thereto, Butler said it was not on the suppression of truth but a suggestion of falsehood.

Nelson replied that this was not the time to measure character with Butler—that could be done some other time. Nelson did not think he would suffer by comparison. Considerable excitement ensued. Logan wanted to say something, but Senator Conkling, who was sitting near him, said, "General, be quiet," and the affair subsided with much suppressed wrath.

Evarts commenced. His first accent hushed the excited assemblage. Evarts spoke to adjournment, and will continue to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Registration, as far as it has progressed, shows that the whites are 1,000 ahead.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The House did no business.

Sumner in the court offered a motion, which lies over, that after conviction by a two thirds majority the Senate shall decide regarding the qualifications required for the President's successor. Williams resumed his argument.

In the House bills were introduced admitting North Carolina and Louisiana on the adoption of the fourteenth article and providing no exclusion from suffrage of classes now enfranchised, and no admission of those disfranchised by the fourteenth article until restored as therein provided.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Indications are that Mr. Davis will not be tried next term of court.

It is stated on public but doubtful authority that Grant has advised Schofield to decline the War Department, and request the President to withdraw his name.

There was a full cabinet meeting to-day.

A synopsis of Evarts' speech is utterly impossible. Alluding to parties to the trial—the House as accusers, the President as the accused, the Senators as jurors, the Chief Justice presiding—Evarts said: We want no volunteers; let no one raise so much as a little finger to jostle the contestants.

Arguing the judicial character of the proceedings, Evarts said: In reply to all the managers who propose to speak in behalf of all the people, he would reply in one sentence, representing one voice—"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Evarts, speaking of the people, says they know their government, and they mean to maintain it, and when they hear this tremendous engines of impeachment, and trial, and threatened conviction, and sentence, has been brought into play—that that power, which has lain in the Constitution like a sword in its sheath, is now drawn, they wish to know what crime the President is accused of. They know that bribery and treason are crimes, and those who are guilty of them should be brought into question and deposed. They are ready to believe that there are other great crimes and misdemeanors touching the conduct of the government and the welfare of the State, which may equally fall within the jurisdiction and the duty, but they wish to know what the crimes are; they wish to know whether the President has betrayed our liberties or our possessions to a foreign State; they wish to know whether he has delivered up a fortress or surrendered a State. They wish to know whether he has made merchandise of the public trust or turned authority to private gain; and when they learn that none of these things are charged or even declaimed about, they yet seek further information, and they are told he has removed a member of his cabinet. Now, the people are familiar with the removal of cabinet officers; so that on the mere statement it does not strike them as either an unprecedented occurrence or as one involving great danger to the States.

Well, how comes it to be a crime, they inquire? Why Congress passed a law for the first time in the history of the government, and undertook to control this removal from office, and provided that if the President should violate it, it should be a crime, or rather a misdemeanor, and a high misdemeanor; and now that he has removed, or undertaken to remove, a member of his cabinet, he is to be removed himself for that cause. He undertook to make an ad interim Secretary of War, and you are to have made for you an ad interim President in consequence.

PROGRESS OF THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL—COLLISION BETWEEN BUTLER & NELSON.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Nelson produced a letter, dated March 6th, with Butler's and Logan's signatures, regarding Alta Vela.

Butler desired to see the letter. Nelson desired some pledge that it would be returned.

Chase made some objection, when Nelson said he would prefer depositing it with the Secretary of the Senate, who could show it to better advantage.

Here the matter stopped. Evarts proceeded with his argument.

Senator Sumner offered an order that—"Whereas, Mr. Nelson, one of the counsel for the President, in addressing the Senate, has used disorderly words, as follows: 'So far as any question the gentleman desires to make with me, this is not the place to make it;' and whereas such language, besides being discreditable to the Senate, is calculated to bring on a duel, or intimate a desire or willingness to fight one; it is, therefore, ordered that Mr. Nelson, one of the counsel for the President, has justly deserved the disapprobation of the Senate."

Nelson rose. The Chief Justice said he could only proceed by unanimous consent. Sumner objected, unless it was for the purpose of explanation. Nelson said he only wished to read a letter in the Alta Vela case. Butler hoped, as far as he was concerned, there would be no further action taken in the matter, but objected to reading the letter. Nelson hoped he would be allowed to say one word. He had intended no offence by what he had said, but if anything was to be done with the resolution, he hoped he would have an opportunity to explain. So far as he was concerned, he was willing to let the matter drop. Sherman objected to present consideration of the resolution. Nelson repeated his desire to present the letter. The Chief Justice put the motion whether Nelson be allowed to proceed. Agreed to. Butler repeated his objection. Senator Trumbull asked that, as the manager had been allowed the privilege of saying what he desired, some privilege be extended counsel. Chief Justice said counsel could not proceed without the consent of the Senate. Davis raised a point of order that after the Senate had permitted counsel to proceed, it was not competent for a manager to object. Chief Justice did not understand leave as allowing counsel to read a letter. Howard begged leave to object to reading of letters until after they were presented to the managers for examination. Sumner positively objected to allowing counsel to proceed, after the language he had used, except for the purpose of explanation. Johnson asked if debate was in order. Confusion here occurred, several Senators speaking at once. Hendricks moved that attorney for the President be allowed to read so much of the letters as would show dates. Agreed to. Nelson then resumed, and said the letter to which reference had been made—Alta Vela—bore date March 9, 1868, signed by Benj. F. Butler, and addressed to Col. Shaffer. Johnson asked if he had the original letter. Nelson understood this to be the original letter. He also understood the signature to be the genuine signature of Benj. F. Butler, and the signatures below to be the genuine signatures of John A. Logan and James A. Garfield. The letter was brief, and he would like permission to read it. Howard objected to the reading. The Chief Justice said the letter could not be read unless by consent of the Senate. Nelson said it was almost impossible for him to explain if he was not permitted to read the letter. The letter is signed by Benj. F. Butler. Beneath his signature are the words, "I concur," which are signed by John A. Logan, and beneath these, "so do I," signed by James A. Garfield.

There was no other date to the letter than March 9, 1868. Johnson asked as to the hand-writing.—Wilson said that the date and body of the letter were the same, but that the signatures were different. Nelson continued: On the 15th of March Chancey F. Black addressed a letter to the President, saying that he inclosed this letter. The Chief Justice said counsel must confine himself to dates. Hendricks said his motion was to allow the attorney to read only so much of the letter as would show the date, and he objected to the reading going any further.

Mr. Nelson said he could not explain unless by going somewhat into the body of the matter. The letter of the same date was further indorsed by Mr. Koontz, Mr. Marshall, Thaddeus Stevens, John A. Bingham, James G. Blaine, and the copy was precisely like the original. Tifton here arose, and with some appearance of excitement moved that the gentleman be allowed to proceed one hour. The Chief Justice did not put the motion, and Mr. Nelson sat down.

LONDON, April 29.—An Abyssinian dispatch says Theodorus shot himself with a pistol as the English approached his last refuge.

A boy while at play in the vicinity of Jackson, Tenn., discovered in the decayed stump of a tree promissory notes, mortgages, and other papers, worth in the aggregate $10,000. They appear to be the property of Daniel Bell. There is no clue to the mystery of their discovery in so singular a hiding place.

THE late venerable President Day, of Yale College, on being asked what he thought of the modern spiritualism, so called, replied, "Either there is nothing in it, or the devil is in it." So we think.

THE PUBLIC HOUSE.

Mrs. Sewell, in one of her ballads, has thus described a public house:

"Sir, did you ever walk along a street,
A low back-street, at night, where drinkers meet?
Where the gin-palace turns the night to day,
And public house and beer shop line the way?
Say, did you listen? What, sir, did you hear?
Our English workmen were enjoying beer.
Did the rude clamor come from happy men,
Or wild beasts, maddened, raging in their den?
You heard the fiendish laugh, the oaths, the strife,
The curses heaped upon a helpless wife;
The wretched harlot's song, the drunkard's roar;
The noisy fiddle and the rattling floor;
You saw the ragged mother, sick and pale;
You heard the miserable infant's wail—
That was the English workman's happy lot!
That was the music to 'the poor man's pot.'
You heard it? Yes—our workmen mad with drink!
Something to make a sober Christian think!"

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

NO. XI.—THE SCRIPTURES.

A careful and candid examination of the character and contents of the Scriptures has often lead to the conclusion that they were edited in heaven, that holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. We would begin this examination of the Scriptures by calling attention to their unity and harmony as proof of the fact that they originated in one mind, and that those who wrote them were under the guidance of one superintending intelligence.

Now if we take up a class of books written by men devoted to medicine, for example, how conflicting we shall find their various theories! We shall find them differing as to the cause of disease, differing in their diagnosis of diseases, and differing as to the diet and medicines suitable to cure diseases. We shall find this the case in writers of the same age and country. When we go back a few centuries we find that the difference is great between the writers of those times and these. Many theories, once confidently promulgated and once fully accepted, have been found, upon fuller investigation, entirely erroneous and have been exploded and altogether abandoned.

So, if we take a class of books treating of natural science, we shall find the same antagonism of theories, the same inculcation of errors, and the same ultimate explosion of them. So, also, with books and writers on law, the laws of one age differing from those of following ages, and of one land from those of other lands. Theology as a science, discussed by uninspired minds, is no exception. The varieties and contrarieties of opinion and theory are almost innumerable.

Now let us, from this standpoint, examine the Bible. The Bible was more than fifteen hundred years in being written. During this long period great changes were made in the philosophies, the governments and the religions of the world. The arts of life were variously modified and improved, and we see the influence of these changes in all other books—on all classes of thinkers and writers. We remark, further, that these inspired books were not class productions, written alone by priests and men trained to the study of theology as a science.—Neither were they all written in the same language or in the same country, and with the same surroundings. Let us consider who wrote these books, and under what circumstances. Warriors, kings, prophets, herdsmen, tax-gatherers, fishermen, physicians and statesmen were the agents employed to commit the Scriptures to writing and circulate them among men. Some of the Scriptures were written in Arabia, some in Judea, some in Assyria, some in Rome, some in Athens, and some in Macedonia. They were written in Hebrew and Greek, with some slight mixture of Chaldee and Syriac. They were written in palaces, in prisons, in deserts. That these various classes of writers were employed there is abundant internal evidence to prove. You have in the book the historical and narrative style of Moses, Joshua, Samuel and Luke, the profound and aphoristic wisdom of Solomon, the sublime and majestic flights of Isaiah, the heart-touching poetry of David, expressing in holy song all the manifold experiences of life, the lucid logic and powerful argumentation of Paul, and the grand and gorgeous imagery of John the Divine. But with all this diversity of time, of circumstances, of education, of language, and of genius, there is no antagonism of doctrine or moral precepts. The unity of God is taught in every part, and everywhere purity of heart and life is demanded. The same great purpose is seen in every part—to reveal God to man, to show us our need of a Redeemer, and to point us to his coming; to reveal to human faith and hope a holier life on earth and a glorious immortality in heaven. Upon what hypothesis, outside of inspiration, can this unparalleled unity and harmony of the Scriptures be accounted for? We are frank to say we know of none, and feel that an attempt at any other solution could but prove a failure. As it is the same sun that shines in Asia, Africa, Europe and America that shines upon the spicy groves of tropic isles, and upon the snowy mountains and ice-bound shores of the Arctic circle, so it is the same Eternal Illuminator who poured light upon the minds of Moses, Isaiah and Paul, and all the goodly company who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

In reading the Book we are constantly impressed with the wonderful combination of simplicity and dignity. While the narrations are simple and level to the apprehension of the humblest minds, there is nothing low, vulgar or profane. Dignity, purity and naturalness mark the narrations of the Book. It contains the tenderest pathos and heart-moving interest in its stories, but never anything ridiculous or absurd. The reading of the Bible purifies our affections, refines our taste, exalts our imagination, and enlarges and instructs our understanding.

The Bible is the most original of all books. With perhaps the exception of less than ten lines, it never quotes from any book but itself—it borrows from none, but lends and gives to all. The grand excellence of the Bible is its truth—true to nature, to life, to experience. Of all books its pencil draws the truest portraits of human character. It nothing extenuates nor sets down aught in malice. Without favor or fear—for it is no respecter of persons—it tells the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, about the various characters it passes under review. Whence then, we ask, came this wonderful Book? It could not have been the offspring of man's erring brain and wayward heart. W.

ROMAN CATHOLIC STATISTICS. — In Ireland the Roman Catholics constitute four-fifths of the population; in British America, two-fifths; in the United States, one-tenth; in Russia, Europe, one-ninth; in Prussia and other German States, one-third. In Great Britain (exclusive of Ireland) there are one and a half millions out of twenty-three millions; in France, thirty-five out of thirty-seven; in Austria, twenty-seven out of thirty-five; in Switzerland, one out of two and a half; in Italy, twenty-one out of twenty-two. Of the thirty millions of Mexico, Central America, and South America, nearly all are Roman Catholics. The same is true of Portugal with its four millions, Spain with its sixteen and a half millions, and Belgium with its four and a half millions. In Norway, Sweden and Denmark there are but six thousand Roman Catholics in a population of eight millions. The entire Roman Catholic population of the globe is about one hundred and eighty-five millions; the entire Protestant population about ninety-five millions.

THE Prince of Wales will pay the sultan of Turkey a visit in August.

THE POWER OF TINSEL.

We are told that to deserve success is better than to win it. And the statement commends itself at once to our instinctive sense of justice. It is surely a better and nobler thing to give than to receive. It is better in itself to give evidence of merit than to bear the palm. Tulit alter honores is a confession of failure, but not of inferiority. All this seems obvious enough; nevertheless, the sentiment has been severely criticised as a false antithesis. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, as the proverb runs; and success, it is said, is the sole criterion of desert. Failure, if not a fault, is something more than a misfortune; it is a proof of weakness. We have no right to say that a man who has failed ought to have succeeded, because the fact that he has not succeeded really settles the question. "Ought," as Punch puts it, "stands for nothing." There is a kind of rude common sense about this rough and ready method of reasoning which to minds impatient alike of doubt or of discussion is almost irresistible. It is a kind of argument that has a natural affinity with the practical instincts of Englishmen, and still more perhaps with the temper of the day, which looks chiefly to results, and to results rapidly achieved. The centuries of patient toil not unfrequently consumed in the gradual elaboration of a mediæval cathedral, as contrasted with the erection of a modern church built by contract, will illustrate this distinction. As a matter of fact, there can be no doubt that it is our tendency to regard success as the one test of merit. It is not merely that we share the vulgar inclination to worship the rising sun—that is no peculiarity of any age or race—but that we feel a genuine respect for those who have got to the top of the ladder, which is very little affected by any knowledge which we may or may not happen to possess as to how they got there. There was a story current in Oxford some years ago about the late President of Magdalen's parting advice to an undergraduate of his college, which, if true, is an amusing comment on this view of things.—"Above all, sir," he is reported to have said, "be sure through life to attach yourself to some great man." The Oxford Nestor, like his Homeric prototype, had been conversant with three generations of men, and his suggestion displayed the shrewdness of long experience. But if it pointed to the readiest means of rising, it certainly did not show that eminence of position is always measured by desert. There is indeed something essentially Philistine, as Mr. Arnold would say, about the popular optimism which identifies the two. It would be sufficiently refuted by the maxim of the old Greek philosophers that no one should be pronounced happy—or, we may add, unhappy—before his death. The failures of one age are often the successes of the next. It is almost a truism to say that the greatest men are before their age, and consequently are not appreciated during life. The old Christian aphorism applies in its way to secular martyrs as well as religious; the blood of the martyrs is the source of progress as well as the seed of the church. The prophet is scorned or slain by his contemporaries, and their children build his sepulchre. This consideration alone would be quite enough to justify the poet's antithesis. But this is not all. Genius, like virtue, is too often "praised and starved," or starved without being praised; and, moreover, if merit fails, so too is demerit crowned. The popular test breaks down, which ever way it is applied. Not only does the world persecute or ignore its benefactors, but the brainless toady and the plausible charlatan are clothed in purple and fare sumptuously. There is a kind of talent, real but not the highest, which will usually command as well as deserve success. There are other kinds, both of talent and of energy, which must be content, as the copy-books have it, to be their own reward. But also—and this is the point we are coming to now—there are capacities of a certain order which secure a market value quite beyond their intrinsic worth.

It is not wonderful that such persons should rise to the surface. They are sure to be both safe and popular. There are, no doubt, "throned seats unscaleable" by their arts, but the thrones are mostly, as the poet says, "ethereal." Those "places of dignity to which large emoluments are attached" may sometimes, as a late dean is said to have boasted in the pulpit, be the reward of a profound mastery of Greek scholarship, but they are at least as often procured by plausibility as by profundity of any kind. While the power of tinsel is everywhere considerable, there are two professions which seem to be its natural sphere—the medical and the clerical—especially the latter. Manners make the man, according to the proverb. Manners make wealthy physicians and influential bishops, in very sober fact. Who are they that enjoy the largest practice and the highest reputation for medical skill, whose word is law to a whole host of dyspeptic dowagers and anxious mothers, whose visits are regarded as a favor, and their saloons thronged by crowds of expectant votaries, and who suck thereout no small advantage? Not always the men who have most completely mastered the secrets of medical science, or who have cured the greatest number of their patients. Few people inquire or care to inquire about that. The velvet tread, the unctuous pressure of the hand, the silvery intonation, the sympathetic yet reassuring smile; these are the infallible passports to many hearts, and, what is more, to many pockets. The Job's comforter who insists with obtrusive honesty on telling disagreeable truths, who pronounces with merciless fidelity the death-warrant of the patient whom no human skill can save, and refuses to be fee'd by the interesting hypochondriac who likes to combine the luxury of valetudinarianism with the reality of health, will too often at best be treated with cold respect. He will not be trusted or employed. Far other is the lot of the pompous sciolist who knows, in a different sense from the apostle's, how to become all things to all men, and more particularly to all women. His cures, where any cure was needed, will be few. But he can whisper bland nothings into the doting mother's ear as he suggests some new remedy, as futile as the last, to mock the last agonies of her dying child. He is never at a loss, when all is over, to account for his skill being baffled by circumstances he could not control. The case was exceptional, or he was called in too late, and meanwhile in the chronic treatment of imaginary ailments he has not won his income and his name. We have heard of a physician receiving fifteen guineas each time for a visit, repeated every other day for years, his only real business being to condole in a professional manner with the wife of his ostensible patient, who was a hopeless invalid. There are, with some exceptions, none who lord it over their fellow-men with more prevailing tinsel than the professors of the healing art, nor is any idolatry of appearances more popular than the worship of Æsculapius.

But the church affords a field for the triumph of tinsel where the prizes are more brilliant, if not so numerous or so substantial. We spoke just now of porphyrogeniti, and the term is peculiarly applicable to the episcopal purple. It would hardly be too much to say, Episopus nascitur, non fit. There is a class of ecclesiastics at Rome who are called prelati, though they are not yet bishops, but only candidates for the mitre. The designation is a happy one. Both within and without the Roman Catholic church there are clerics, or intending clerics, who are born prelati, though they do not bear the name. It is not merely that they desire the office of bishop, which of course they do, but there is a sort of episcopality about them—if we may be permitted to coin the word—which gives good promise that they will some day have it. They are bishops in posse, so to say, and, unless some unforeseen obstacle is interposed, one may be pretty sure that they will eventually become bishops in esse. It is not easy to define with exactness what goes to make up this inherent capability for a bishopric, but it is impossible to mistake its characteristics when we see them. It is something quite independent of the qualifications laid down by St. Paul, and has a very remote connection with the question proposed in the consecration service. It need not indicate vigor of thought, or breadth of sympathy, or depth of theological attainments; on the contrary, it is more likely to connote the absence of such qualities. If the character must be described in one word, that word is tinsel; but then it is the tinsel of the sanctuary. It glitters, though it is not gold; and its glitter sanctifies, or seems to sanctify the temple. We have all of us at times come across such men, whether in their chrysalis state or in the full butterfly development of lawn sleeves or mitre. And there is something about look and tone and gesture which bewrayeth them; incessu patuit. The faultless propriety of clerical attire, the thin lips, the blandly modulated voice, the serene self-possession, the catlike footfall, the inscrutable smile—which ill-natured critics have called an ecclesiastical grimace—these are among the outward and visible signs of that inward grace which is the augury of hierarchical success. They mark the priest of whom it may as safely be predicted that he will, under ordinary favorable conditions, become an archbishop or a cardinal, as it may be predicted of a different calibre—such men, for instance, as Dr. Newman or Dr. Arnold—that they will not. Your clerical porphyrogenitus has won success because he was born to win it; but only by a play upon words can he be said to have deserved it. He came into the world with a silver spoon in his mouth, or rather, let us say, with a gift of tongues by no means Pentecostal, which has enabled him to speak to every man in his own language, and chiefly to all that are in authority. He stoops to conquer with instinctive tact, and shrouds under a veil of diplomatic reserve inconvenient opinions which cannot altogether be suppressed. But his main study is to make his mind a microcosm of the prevalent orthodox beliefs, and to reflect with fidelity, while he seems to mould, the approved tone of religious sentiment. In nine cases out of ten he will succeed where better men have failed. Originality, vigor, courage, straightforwardness are excellent things, but they are at a discount in the market. The tinsel circle gilds the straightened forehead of plausible mediocrity, while the lofty brow of genius wears no crown.—London Saturday Review.

THE PSALMS.

The Bible, as a religious book, would be most incomplete without the Book of Psalms; for, in a complete religious book, there must be not only revelation, but the response to revelation. And the response is no whit less inspired and sacred than the revelation is. We know from whom the inspiration of true worship comes. The prayer and praise which go up to God, from hearts that worship him in spirit and in truth, first came down from him; and the worship which "is written in the Book of Psalms," because it was real worship out of honest hearts, that meant it when they uttered it, that prayed because they needed to, and sung because for their religious joy, they could not but sing, was doubtless prompted by the presence of the Holiest within them, kindled by the breath of God, illumined by his light, and quickened by his life. It is with this consideration that the argument for the inspiration of this Book of Psalms should start. They are real prayers and real praises—most intensely real, and therefore inspired. The men who uttered them and wrote them felt what they said, and meant it heartily. They cried out for help because they must have help; because if help were not forthcoming they must perish. They sang praises and gave thanks because their hearts were full, and they could not restrain expression.

This, then, is the substance of the Book of Psalms. There is a marvelous variety in it. There are prayers of almost every sort, fitted for almost every circumstance. There are praises copious enough for all exuberance of worship, various enough for all the varying use of gratitude and joy. Every one of them is full of worship. Almost every one is, either wholly or in part, directly spoken to the Most High, and the others utter holy meditations, sacred memories, devout longings, which are no less worshipful for being indirect. They are by various authors. They were written at various times. Some of them bear marks of careful study, and of the most laborious and artificial arrangement. Others seem to have come glowing with the fervor of a mighty inspiration which refused constraint. But however this may be, each one of them is the utterance of a man who had something to say to God, and said it therefore; something about God, or else something about himself; or yet, more probably, something about both himself and God. It was something that he wanted to say to God. It was not enough that he could tell it to his fellow-men: he needed also to utter it to God. If he kept silence, it was as if a fire were burning in him; he could not keep silence. He wanted to tell God how much, how lovingly, how gratefully, he bore in mind the memory of his goodness. He wanted to tell God how pleasant and how comforting a thing it was to trust in him, to be a lamb in his safe fold, to be a citizen of his strong city, to be a soldier in his unconquerable hosts. He wanted to express to God the wonder and delight with which the mighty works he witnessed in the world about him had impressed him. He wanted to declare how grand the course of nature seemed to him, how magnificent the works of Providence. He wanted to rehearse to God the glorious history which his right hand and mighty arm had wrought out for the people. These things he wanted to express to God; these things he called upon all people to express and say, not to themselves, and not to one another, but to God. Not that God needed to be told of them; of course that was not it; but because it was "a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant, and praise is comely." This was what each psalmist, as he wrote his psalm, believed.

And so, too, with the prayers. These psalmists needed to speak to God concerning themselves also. They wanted to ask him for his help and his continual blessing. They wanted to ask forgiveness for their sins, real sins, great sins, that needed real forgiveness, great forgiveness; as when David prayed his fifty-first psalm, for instance, which is so deeply burdened that the language fairly groans with the passionate repentance of a sinful soul. They wanted to ask for help against enemies who plagued and persecuted them in all sorts of ways. They wanted to commend to God the interests of their country, and to supplicate his favor for it, that he might give it victory in battle, and prosperity in peace, and always righteousness. They wanted to sustain their souls in doubt and darkness and despondency, that came to them as they come to us, by crying out to God in earnest supplication. Not that he needed to be told what they desired—for they knew that he would know, before they asked him, what they were in want of—but because their needs must speak; because their God was one who could hear prayer and answer it—a living God, a Spirit, to whom it was not a matter of mere unconcern, as it was to the stone gods or wooden gods of heathen people, whether they were prayerful or silent; because, as one of them expresses it, while he kept silent his very bones grew old with the inarticulate pressure of his emotion; because, as another one has said—

"As the hart panteth after the water-brooks,
So panteth my soul after thee, O God!
My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God;
When shall I come and appear before God?"

That is what each psalmist more or less distinctly and profoundly felt; and it was in this way that he spoke to God about himself and all that was his, fully, freely, earnestly; till, at last, the whole catalogue of human wants has found an utterance in this complete collection of the inspired prayers of Hebrew worshipers.—Rev. G. B. Bacon.

CONCLUDING A SERMON.

Under this caption the Gospel Herald has the following remarks. We commend them especially to the "one word more" preachers:

There is more in concluding a sermon than commencing it. "All is well that ends well"—yet it is better if it also commence well. But a poor commencement may be endured if the sermon ends well. The speaker may falter and blunder badly in the start if he come out nobly and victoriously at the end. It is the end of the race—the conclusion of the sermon—where the preacher grasps the prize.

It is here more than anywhere else that he wins a soul for his Master, or falls short of any jewel for his crown.

As there have been armies that gained everything at the opening of the battle, and lost all at its close, so there are ministers that gain all at the commencement or in the midst of their discourses, but lose all in the conclusion. How?

1. By length.—The best discourses pall upon the ears of a congregation after a certain time. Neither mortal nor immortal can hold a modern congregation two hours with profit. When the attention lags through physical or mental laws, fire and eloquence are vain. That a sermon may be "a success" it must cease while the hearers want it to continue—not continue when the hearers are secretly praying that it may end.

2. Through disappointed expectation.—The mind is in no condition to be benefited under the smart of disappointment. That is to say, there are preachers who often declare to their hearers—"One word more, and I have done." Those who take him at his word expect him to sit down in a moment. Many moments elapse only to increase impatience by the same unseemly promise—"One word more and we conclude." With a slight perspiration breaking from the brow, and with a prayer for something of Job's patience, the hearers sink back into their seats. They resist on extreme nervousness with but a tolerable propriety till all patience is annihilated by the third promise—"Another word, by dear hearers, and we have done." Then come thoughts that should never be written, and inward censure that would soon put a period to the preacher's "one word more" could he at that moment read the thoughts of men's hearts.

For a long time we have observed that the promise of "one word more" before the conclusion is a sure indication of a most tiresome and provoking continuation.

Why say anything about when we are to conclude? Why stick up these finger-boards along the line of a discourse—these "one words more" that continually say "Forty miles to conclusion?" Why haunt the hearer by continually reminding him that he is on a sea without a shore, or a journey with no visible or known end? It is better that he may master it with such completeness that he may carry his hearers with him, heightening their hearers as he progresses, and bringing them easily, naturally, with good effect to the conclusion.—Telescope.

FARM AND GARDEN.

STRAWBERRY GROWING.

BY JAMES F. C. HYDE.

The strawberry is one of the most delicious of fruits, and comes at a season of the year when there are no rivals. Strawberries and cream—especially if it be Jersey cream—have a charm for all, and nothing prevents the more extensive consumption of this fruit but its high price. Besides being an agreeable fruit, it is also one of the most healthful. Every year a greater breadth of ground is devoted to strawberries, and yet the prices increase rather than diminish, so great is the demand for this fruit. Besides those that are consumed in a fresh state, great quantities are preserved in cans and otherwise. Now admitting all this, it becomes us to see what means can be adopted to increase the cultivation of this fruit, that if possible prices may be reduced so that many good people who are not overburdened with this world's goods, and who are now wholly denied this luxury, may occasionally eat of that which is so easily produced.

It is not difficult to raise good strawberries, whatever may be said by those who are afraid to soil their fingers, or those who do not wish to verify in their own person the truth of the curse pronounced upon Adam. It is true that there is some hard, back-aching work, that will in a hot day start the perspiration and color to the face; but what of that? Who ever expects to attain results in any department without labor? Many persons who own gardens, because they cannot raise so large a quantity of fruit or of so good quality as their neighbors, neglect the crop wholly and rely upon the markets for their supply. It is a great mistake to do this, and we do earnestly advise all who own or hire a garden plot to set out some strawberry plants. Set out more than you think you will want, so that after the birds have taken the share they are so sure to claim you may have enough for family use, and possibly a few good boxes for your pastor and other friends. Fruit that has been picked the day before, packed in close boxes and carried to market during the hot weather, is a poor apology for that freshly picked from the vines with the hulls left on. How those pent up in the hot, dusty cities are to be pitied in fruit time, who, if their means permit them to indulge at all, are obliged to buy fruit that has been gathered for several days, perhaps, and is nearly destitute of good flavor. They must take them in this condition or not at all; but not so with those who are the fortunate owners of gardens or occupants of estates where the strawberry patch can easily be arranged. It shall be our purpose to give some information concerning the cultivation of this fruit, particularly for the benefit of beginners or those who may never have begun. The "old stager" in the business will find nothing new or strange in our talk. Our suggestions will be more particularly adapted to New England, and especially so when we speak of varieties.

SOIL.

The strawberry seems to adapt itself to a wide range of soil and location, but there are some conditions that should be avoided. For early berries, select a warm southern exposure and plant on such a spot the early varieties. Most any soil that will produce a good crop of common garden vegetables will do for strawberries. Should always avoid a wet piece of ground, peat meadow, or other low place; for on such land, though a large growth of foliage may be obtained, and possibly a fair crop of fruit, the berries will be of light color, soft and of poor flavor. On low, wet lands there will also be danger of injury from water and ice in winter.

On the other hand, avoid very dry ground, especially for the later varieties, for the crop will be quite likely to be cut off or greatly lessened by the hot, dry weather.

PREPARATION OF LAND.

Manure heavily, say at the rate of ten to twenty cords to the acre, with well rotted horse manure and some ashes, if convenient, and plough deeply, or in the garden spade well, to cover the manure and to thoroughly mix it with the soil. The soil should be freed from stones and other obstructions, if possible without too great cost, and should be as well prepared as for any other garden crop.

VARIETIES.

There is a difference of opinion even among fruit growers as to what are the best varieties, but we must speak from our own experience, whether it suits all parties or not. For market purposes we should recommend the Wilson; not because of its high flavor, for in this respect it is deficient, but because it is a great bearer, the fruit is large and sells well. Probably that variety is more popular throughout the entire country at the present time than any other. We should add the Hovey's Seedling and Brighton Pine. For home use we should say Jenny Lind for early picking, Brighton Pine, Triomphe de Grand (to be grown in hills) and Hovey's Seedling. If one is disposed to take special pains to get large fruit let him plant La Constante. If a white variety, Lennig's White. These varieties will give a succession of fruit for several weeks. If there is a desire to try some of the newer sorts, there are Jucunda, Agriculturist and others.

SETTING THE PLANTS.

We like to set out strawberry plants the last of April, or just as soon as the land will do to work, to get the benefit of the April showers. For field culture we have usually set the rows four to five feet apart and the plants in a single row three to four inches apart. The Hovey's Seedling does not make runners freely, and we advise setting a double row and breaking joints, so that the plants will not come opposite each other. This latter variety being a pistillate, it will not yield a good crop unless some staminate or other variety be planted near it that has plenty of pollen to spare. The best way in field culture is to plant four or five rows of the Hovey's and then one of the Brighton Pine, Wilson or Triomphe de Grand. All the other varieties we have given will do well planted alone. The rows may be marked off through the field by running a cultivator with one tooth only, or with some implement that will make a shallow mark in which the plants may be set, or use a line and set the plants by that. When this work is performed nip off the larger leaves from the plants, spread out the roots well, and set the crown of the plant a very little below the surface. Some prefer to raise a slight ridge on which to set the plants, but we recommend a nearly flat surface—no depressions—for they will hold the water in winter and the plant will be destroyed. In the course of three or four weeks the ground should be hoed over to kill all the weeds that have made their appearance, and this operation should be repeated through the summer as often as it may become necessary. By the middle of July the plants will begin to make runners, and from that time more care must be exercised so as not to injure the new plants, and more hard work will be required. When persons have the time, and their plantation of strawberries is not large, it is a good plan to cover up the runners a little, so that the new plants will root more readily. When they do well they should cover the entire ground before cold weather. Late in autumn the beds should receive a thorough and final weeding for the season, and as winter comes on, be covered with coarse straw, horse manure, meadow hay, corn stalks, evergreen boughs or any similar substance that will protect them from the change of the season. Care must be used not to cover too deeply nor with material that will lie too compactly, or many of the plants will be destroyed. The next spring, about the first of April, or a little later, or earlier, as the season may require, remove the covering and with a spade or hoe cut out some walks about a foot wide between the rows, using the plants to set in new beds. Before they begin to bloom go over the bed, carefully removing all weeds and grass, for if the work is worth doing at all it is worth doing well. All this being done, a bountiful crop should be the reward. After the crop is gathered the vines should, in most cases, unless they are in hills, be ploughed under, and if desirable a late crop of vegetables can be raised on the land the same season.

The experience of many years fully justifies us in advising this course of setting new beds every year and ploughing up the old ones after they have given one crop. There may be exceptions, and we have seen in some instances fair crops from beds kept to fruit the second time. We have endeavored to give the plainest and simplest way of raising this fruit, and one that we have practised for many years and know to be good. If others have better notions, let them write them out and send them along for the benefit of the public.—Watchman and Reflector.

Geographical Science and Missionaries.

There is no class of men that has contributed more to the advancement of geographical science than missionaries. Impelled by an earnest desire to benefit their fellow-men by imparting to them knowledge that shall, by its humanizing influences, bring them out from the darkness of barbarism, with a self-denial worthy of our highest approbation, they surrender the society of kindred and friends and the comforts of civilized life for homes in distant and unknown lands. Toward whatever portion of the globe we may turn our eyes, whether it be amid the snows of the arctics or under the burning sun of the equator, in the jungles of India or on the islands of the seas, wherever man has made his habitation, may be found the missionary, laboring not for the accumulation of wealth, not for personal aggrandizement, but as the apostle of Him who commanded, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

From the missionary stations throughout the world we receive not only much valuable information relative to the country, its people and products in their immediate vicinity, but there are few missionaries who do not explore the surrounding country to a greater or less distance. Let us, by way of illustration, state a single instance: A missionary society desired to make a trial of their work in Eastern Africa, then a new field, and established a mission, the headquarters of which were on the eastern coast of Zanguebar, opposite the Island of Mombas. After establishing themselves, for the purpose of becoming acquainted with the manners and customs of the native tribes, that they might better judge of the prospects of the results of their labors, they penetrated into the interior. On one of their explorations, seeing at a distance a lofty mountain, they made their way to it. This was a snow mountain, the Kilimanjo. An account of this journey was published in England, but the existence of such a mountain was denied by the scientific men there. The missionaries persisted in their testimony, and in order to be able to furnish further proof of the truth of their assertions made further explorations, and not only discovered a second snow mountain, the Kenia, but sent home information, obtained from the natives, of a great inland sea.

The Royal Geographical Society, after making the most thorough investigation possible, determined to send an expedition to explore this country, and the result was the discovery of two lakes, the Tanganyika, and one larger than this, which was named by Captain Speke the Victoria Nyanza.

While this expedition, under Captains Speke and Grant, was at work in this vicinity, another expedition, of which Mr. (now Sir Samuel) Baker was the head, was formed for the purpose of ascending the Nile, and finding, if possible, another and larger lake, of which vague reports were obtained from the natives. After various detentions, and overcoming almost insurmountable obstacles, they at length, in March, 1864, came in sight of the lake, "like a sea of quicksilver lying far beneath the great expanse of waters forming a boundless sea-horizon on the south and southwest, glittering in the noonday sun; while on the west, at fifty or sixty miles distance, blue mountains rise from the bosom of the lake to a height of about seven thousand feet above its level."

This lake, which they named the Albert Nyanza, proved to be the source of the upper branches of the Nile, and settles definitely a question that has troubled the geographical world for years.

It is not probable that these results would have been obtained for years but for the establishment of the missionary station alluded to.

But it is not as explorers that missionaries, as a class, render the greatest service to geographical science, but as aids in exploring expeditions by establishing for them points of departure. There are but few expeditions that do not, on the outposts of civilization, halt at a missionary station to gird themselves anew before plunging into the unknown regions before them. The friendship of the natives of the country, secured by missionary labors, enables more complete preparations to be made, and often supplies guides for some distance, and frequently introductions to and safe passage through sections upon which the light of the mission shines only by reflected rays.

There is scarcely a history of an expedition of discovery in any country that does not contain confirmation of this, and the acknowledgments of the explorers of their indebtedness to the missionaries.—Colton's Journal of Geography.

SELF-DENIAL.—It is the great pivot of our moral being — the dividing line between a great man and a bad man. A man need not go from home to be heroic; he need not go from himself to be "greater than he who taketh a city." He need not seek any other theater of conquest than himself. He has here enough to do—a thousand battle-fields; and if he will, can acquire fame in heaven and "glory everlasting."

A VISIT TO THE GEYSER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FAMILIEN-JOURNAL.

The landscape of Iceland is not marked by much variety. Though often grand, it is always dead and monotonous. Ever the same alternation of steep valleys, shut in by precipitous walls of rock, covered usually with lichens which show white and gleaming in the distance, of basins among the hills, formed of old rugged lava fields, of dark little mountain lakes, in the waters of which no fresh, green vegetation is ever mirrored. Far in the southwestern horizon the lofty crest of Hecla towers above the landscape. Just now, the mountain giant persists in keeping his cap upon his head, and, in spite of the hot July day, is only dimly visible through the cloud of mist which surrounds him. We would have gladly paid him a visit, but he lies too far out of our way. Besides, we should find in the ravines which score the broad sides of the mountain nothing but the traces of its destructive activity, which has surrounded it with an eternal desolation. Indeed, every day we meet on our path the signs of this activity, reminding us that we are standing upon a spot of earth which has been for ages subjected to unceasing convulsions of the surface.

Six days since our departure from Reikiavik lie behind us—days full of toil and hardship, which have yielded nothing, save at night a friendly welcome to the lonely farmhouse of some peasant, a frugal meal, an evening's entertainment in the so-called "bathing-room"—heaven only knows why this name is given to the apartment which serves as the ordinary living-room of the Icelanders, for they never by any chance bathe themselves—and, finally, a hard bed upon some sheep skins.

To-day we stand at last before the goal of all our wanderings, and at the same time before one of the most remarkable of nature's wonders, not only in Iceland, but in the whole world—the Geyser. It was not until late in the evening that we reached the wretched huts of some poor natives, who have found a meagre home in the vicinity of the "great boiler." Eager as we were to get sight of the famous fountain, we were forced to restrain our curiosity until the next day, as our guide, in other respects not particularly superstitious, made an exception in favor of the Geyser. In this he only shared the views which are in vogue among his fellow countrymen. Old traditions relate that the Geyser is the frightful caldron in which the Devil cooks up the damned, and that the temerity of frivolous sceptics has often been visited with condign punishment. We found, therefore, that we must submit, and defer our expectations to the next morning.

Nevertheless, even this evening we were forcibly reminded of the neighborhood of the wonderful Geyser. From the remarks which our hostess let fall, we learned that the exceedingly simple viands which she set before us—among which dried unsalted fish played a most important part—had been cooked by the heat of one of the little springs which surround the Great Geyser, and without doubt owe their origin to the same causes as the latter. Although the couch offered us for the night was but little better than the hard tufa-rocks without, still we were at least protected in the huts from the heavy dew, and, more than all, our utter exhaustion and fatigue made us soon forget the want of accustomed comforts.

At last—too slowly, indeed, for our eager expectation—the day begins to break. Our guide is already up, and prepared for the tramp, and we do not long delay to follow him. A short walk of a few minutes' duration brings us to the wonderful fountain. It lies in a shallow valley, which is called by the inhabitants Hankedal, and is evidently of volcanic origin. To such a character plainly point the sharply separated strata of tufa and streams of scoria piled one upon another, of which the mountain walls are formed, while the bed of the valley is a swampy meadow. Here and there a thin spiral of steam rises from one of the hot springs already mentioned, and, indeed, we perceive to our astonishment that these are so numerous as to give to the basin of the valley the appearance of the bottom of a huge sieve, of which these springs form the openings.

Through this labyrinth of springs, the waters of which sometimes ooze away through the marshy meadow land, sometimes bubble and boil up violently to the height of a foot or more, we pick our way up to the great seething fountain itself. This has taken care to make its presence known, even at a long distance. The sediment from the water which is continually steaming out of it have formed about the spring a circular wall two hundred feet or more in thickness, and about thirty feet in height. When the summit of this mound is reached, you look down into a gently sloping basin, which has a diameter of perhaps sixty feet, with a depth of seven or eight. This is the vast caldron in which seethes the famous Geyser, far more grand, as you may well suppose, than our most renowned fountains in their marble basins. In the middle of this bowl is a cylindrical tube or shaft—a huge pit, about ten feet wide at the top, but narrowing toward the base, and seventy feet or more in depth. These, at least, are the measurements which have been made by an enterprising explorer with the aid of a plumb line.

But how grievously disappointed were we by our first sight of the Geyser! We had expected to find a great pillar of water boiling up at short intervals with mighty convulsions; and, instead of this, we looked down upon a clear water-mirror, which lay quietly some four or five feet below the edge of this central shaft. Glittering white bubbles, to be sure, rose in great numbers to the surface, and a moderate ebullition, which every now and then agitated the water, gave a hint of the mysterious powers at work in the depths of this giant spring. The guide, who had meanwhile thrown himself down at his ease on the hard ground, and was perhaps dreaming of the time when kobolds and witches still carried on their wild work here, smiled at our disappointment. He knew only too well that it would not last long, and that we would soon come to respect what seemed now such a quiet, innocent-looking well.

Several hours have passed in this way. The surface of the water in the Geyser has gradually risen, and almost reached the upper edge of the shaft. This, as well as the bubbles now rising more quickly, and in greater numbers, seem to our guide the sign that an outburst is near at hand. By his advice we draw back from the immediate vicinity of the well, and take our stand on the summit of the wall. From this point we can overlook the basin, and easily and distinctly see what takes place at its bottom. The violently seething flood has in the mean time reached the edge of the well, and flows slowly over, bubbling and boiling. This is the moment at which an outbreak usually takes place. Deep down in the entrails of the earth begins a mysterious, uncomfortable grumbling and murmuring, which presently increases to a rolling thunder, accompanied every now and then with a dull roar or sharp detonation, as if huge rocks were being broken and rent asunder beneath the surface of the earth. The ground, too, trembles so violently that the wall of the basin seems on the point of falling to pieces. And now the whole interior of the Geyser rises with a mighty convulsion; a boiling-hot column of water separates itself, and ascends higher and higher, forming itself as it rises into different, often fantastic shapes, and at last stands for a moment—an animated giant pillar—seemingly motionless before us. Breaking forth at first, girdled with glittering foam, and radiant with brilliant colors, it is almost instantly veiled in impenetrable clouds of vapor and steam, which darken the sun itself, even when in the full brilliancy of noonday. But the huge bright column of water itself bursts its way through the thick clouds of vapor, and its topmost points gleam with dazzling white. A light crown of foam wreathes about the apex, and forms the graceful capital of the huge pillar, which, indeed, lasts only for a moment to delight the eye of the astounded beholder.

As if exhausted by the efforts of its rise, the column of water sinks slowly, then more quickly, at last with fearful rapidity. Again, the earth seems to quake; this time, however, shaken by the tremendous force of the falling waters, which in a moment have changed the whole crater into a lake. For a little while yet there hangs above the fountain a cloud which glitters like gold and silver dust. It is the water from the upper part of the column, which falls back to the earth in a fine mist. The breeze meanwhile has carried away over the valley the thick clouds of steam, which sink in drops upon the grass of the meadow, kept always moist by these showers.

We have remained standing all this time on the brink of the wall, wet to the skin and shivering with cold. The magnificence of the sight overwhelmed us with dumb amazement. And, to say the truth, the powerful impression which it made upon us put completely to flight all attempts to understand the wonderful phenomenon. To what a tremendous height did the column of water seem to us to rise! How impossible to believe what trustworthy witnesses assure us to be the fact—that the gigantic shaft very rarely reaches, never exceeds, a height of ninety feet. Our experience was that of which we see instances every day. Once ready to yield to illusion, we are carried in a moment to extremes, and always, too, in perfect good faith.

The wonderful spectacle which an outbreak of the Geyser affords has long been a subject which has exercised the ingenuity of philosophers. That the effort to explain it has given rise to many erroneous theories can easily be imagined. The phenomenon is now so far understood as the nature of the thing will permit; that is to say, an hypothesis has been suggested, which suffices at least to explain it at each moment of its manifestation.

In order to arrive at a clear understanding of its nature two questions have to be answered. In the first place, How is the fountain shaft of the Geyser formed? In answering this question we will adopt the explanation of the famous geologist, Gotta. The hot springs, impregnated with silicious earth, which frequently make their appearance out of the volcanic rock at a distance of five miles from Hecla, on the edge of a high plateau, build up little cones about their mouths by the deposit of this silicious earth. The formation of these cones takes place in the following manner. As the cooling of the hot water of the springs causes it to deposit the silicious earth which it holds in solution, and as this deposit is the greatest near the outlet, we find there the thickest layers of the earth; on the other hand, immediately over the outlet itself the contraction of the orifice by means of this deposit is prevented partly by the strong current, partly by the high temperature of the water. The cone formed in this way will naturally be the higher the longer the water flows from the opening of the spring, the greater the amount of silicious earth which it contains, and the more quickly it cools. In proportion, therefore, to the height of the cone is the length of the fountain shaft increased, and the more favorable do these conditions become for violent outbreaks both of water and steam.

What forces, however, are to be regarded as the causes of these violent eruptions? It may sound strange when we say that it is the same force, the action of which every child observes in the boiling tea-kettle; the same that for years has driven our locomotives over the railway, our steamers over the waves of the ocean, and which is the powerful motive element in a thousand and one different machines—the power of confined steam. That which a century ago was regarded as a triumph of human genius—the practical application of this tremendous power—has here been shadowed forth for us by nature for thousands of years. Let us try to explain, from this point of view, the phenomenon of the eruption itself. After every outbreak the surface stands in the shaft at a depth of several feet, and slowly rises from this level until it flows over the edge. All the water, however, does not flow away, but a part runs back from the sides of the latter, until, after becoming heated anew, it rises again with the stream in the centre of the fountain. Observation has shown, also, that the temperature of this column diminishes as the water rises; that the heat is always greater below than above; and, also, that it is constantly on the increase from the moment of one eruption to that of the next which ensues, without, however, reaching the boiling point. The temperature comes nearest this point at a height midway in the shaft, and, as soon as the heat which is being constantly evolved from the centre of the earth has warmed the water to this degree, a layer of the latter is converted into steam. This diminishes the pressure upon the stratum next beneath, which, in obedience to one of nature's laws, is likewise turned to steam, and so on, with a greater or less portion of the lower part of the column. It is this accumulated steam which, by its expansion, drives the column of water above it with great violence out of the shaft into the air, and causes the wonderful phenomenon of which we were the delighted and astounded witnesses. After the fall of the column precisely the same process begins anew.—Every Saturday.

GOD'S EXISTENCE.—Galileo, the most profound philosopher of his age, when interrogated by the inquisition as to his belief of a Supreme Being, replied, pointing to a straw on the floor of his dungeon, that from the structure of that object alone he would infer with certainty the existence of an intelligent Creator.

THE bitterness of humility is a tonic to the spirit. To humiliate yourself is as necessary in this wicked world as it is for travelers through African jungles to take, every now and then, a draught of quinine.—Spurgeon.

THE Christian life is not an engagement by contract between a master and his servant. It is the union of two hearts—that of the Saviour and the saved—by the enduring ties of the most intimate love.

CHINA MISSION.

I am still calling upon the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to send me contributions for Brother Lambuth. I hope they will do so before the month of May passes. Let us get through with this business, then we can have the latter part of the conference year to take the conference collections, and for domestic missions, etc.

Will not every preacher respond to this call? Do, my brethren.

Address me at Sharon, Mississippi. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

THE MISSIONARY SECRETARYSHIP.—Our readers have been apprised of the resignation of Rev. Dr. Sehon, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions. The Rev. W. G. E. Cunningham, formerly missionary to China, has been appointed secretary ad interim. Prof. Arbogast, of Abingdon, Va., says, in a letter to the St. Louis Christian Advocate: With Brother Cunningham I have been, as you know, most intimately associated for some two years. Of his fitness for the office there is no doubt. Thoroughly versed in the workings of our missionary system, devotedly attached to the cause, prudent and circumspect as a financier, endowed with superior capacities as a lecturer on a subject which he thoroughly understands, he will make a most efficient working man in the field of church labor. For once the right man is in the right place, and the experience of the past ought to teach us that qualification for office, and sympathy for men, ought to control us in our selection of men for high positions in the church.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE TERRAPIN NECK MURDER.—By a letter from Mr. George P. Deweese, received per steamer Plain City, we are placed in possession of the facts concerning the arrest of the murderers of Henry Keenan and family, and their terrible punishment at the stake! The lateness of the hour prevents anything further than a synopsis of the affair. The murderers were arrested on Friday night by Capt. Resor, deputy marshall of this city, delivered over to the civil authorities on Saturday, and last night they were forcibly taken from the custody of the officers of the law by a band of negroes, and burnt at the stake!

Gen. Wm. R. Peck and Capt. James Cavalier, of Omega, accompanied Capt. Resor in his pursuit of the guilty parties, and rendered invaluable assistance by their good advice and knowledge of the country. The murderers—both negroes—made a full confession, which, with the full particulars of this horrible affair, will appear to-morrow morning.—Vicksburg Times.

FAITH WITH POWER.

We distinguish between the work of faith within us and the work by faith wrought without. Of this latter there is an illustration in the power of those who brought the palsied man into the presence of Christ. The man himself seems to have been as weak in faith as he was helpless in body. But his friends, or probably one strong friend, seized hold upon him, had him borne where Christ was, and, undaunted by the impossibility of penetrating the crowd, had him raised to the top outside of the house—a movement which surprises us more than the letting him down—had the house partly unroofed, procured cords, tied them to the four corners of the couch, and by the aid of four strong, or may be eight, men let the whole down, by an approach to the wonder-working Master entirely original, irregular, out of line, obtrusive, but immensely in earnest and irresistible. That couch, thus descending upon the very heads of the crowd, commanded attention. The whole action attracted the Saviour to the men who with such thoroughness and promptness of purpose brought in the patient, fully as much as to the patient himself. They evidently had faith enough, if he had none; and it was their faith that commanded the power.

This is that faith of which Christ speaks elsewhere—that it could pluck up a tree by the roots and plant it in the sea, or by a word lift a mountain and hurl it into the deep. A very great and impossible sort of thing, but a tremendous measure of the outside power of faith. Not that it is expected that faith shall be employed in any performance so improfitable as that would be; for men have too many great uses and needs for it to allow of any such waste of its precious power. But this is one way of stating that faith only begins in the region of the impossible, but moves freely in it; that it is its native, proper element; that the lifting and tossing a mountain is easy to it, even in its feeblest first degree, when as a small seed—not a huge strain upon its perfected strength. There is the faith perceptive, that sees invisible things, and the faith realizing, that grasps intangible things, and the faith with power, that does impossible things.

Who can measure the resources in heaven and earth that respond to this force? As the least touch upon a small wheel sets in motion a large freight train, so does this faith move the thousand wheels of the divine system of a promise ponderous with the wealth of God. For the present these energies, so vast, wait upon our faith, and by them and it we can turn the world upside down. God keeps the machinery, but we have the use of it. And in every man's closet there is a single point of power which, if he will press, can start the universe. He need not care to know the involved means by which his prayer and faith succeed. It is enough for him to see that they do.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

The twenty-second anniversary of the Methodist Sunday schools of New Orleans was celebrated last Sabbath. The exercises were at the Carondelet street church, and began at three o'clock in the afternoon. The American and German schools were there, eleven in all, three of which were German. We believe the schools of Gretna and Carrollton were not present in a body, though some of the pupils and teachers mingled in the congregation. As usual, on this occasion, the house was more than full, galleries and aisles, and no room left even for standing.

We know not how many children there are in our Sunday schools in the city, but the body of the church was mostly occupied by them alone. Wm. H. Foster, Esq., general superintendent of the Union, was in charge of the proceedings. The programme was a full one and varied. There were original addresses, recitations, dialogues and singing. There was no failure. All the performances were good; some were surpassingly excellent. We were kept wide awake and deeply entertained for three hours on that sultry evening. In the musical department there was a cabinet organ, and several assistant singers, under the direction of Mr. Black. The children, however, did the singing, and did it well. As well as we can remember, it was better than at any previous anniversary. At any rate it was delightful and satisfactory.

Not the least pleasing feature of the occasion was the presence of our German schools, all neat in attire and orderly in their behavior. They sang several songs in German, and with the sweetness and accuracy which characterizes this music-loving people. On the whole, the exercises were everything that could be desired. The scene was impressive and most beautiful to look upon—a thousand children with their sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks, a sea of young faces upturned and rippled over with joyous smiles.

Twenty-two years have passed since this yearly gathering of all our schools was inaugurated. Since then this multitude of pupils have been born, and those who took part in the first celebration are, many of them, experienced teachers and useful members of the church. A very few of the teachers who were then present are still engaged in the good work. Such men as Capt. R. L. Robertson, Wm. G. Sherry and Richard Kean have grown gray since we first knew them in the Sunday schools, and they are still at their posts. Not many ministers of the gospel will number more stars in their crowns. Such examples deserve to be recorded to stimulate and encourage the faithful, and to rebuke those who have prematurely retired from this inviting field of labor.

We do not see how any Christian can be restrained from entering this open door of usefulness. The sight of so many children waiting for instruction, and ready for the molding influence of religion, ought to be an irresistible call to exertion. Gratifying as is the exhibit of our strength in this department, we are sure that it might be greatly increased. We shall never feel satisfied until our people are all alive to this interest, and until every man and woman in the church becomes in some way identified with it. Besides the grateful encouragement which this anniversary affords, it ought to stir us up to increased effort, and to plan and labor for still higher results. Not half of our resources in this line have yet been developed. If all would do their duty the roll of teachers would be doubled, and hundreds of children who are now without religious education might be brought under the influence and training of the gospel. All honor to those who are engaged in this department of the Lord's vineyard. Nowhere will toil and self-denial pay so well. They that reap in this field shall receive wages unto eternal life.

The Court of Impeachment.

"Crises" have been so many and oft since the war that we have learned to consider that the fortunes of the country are suspended upon no one event. But the drama now being acted in the Senate Chamber of the United States surely presents this surpassing interest, that it will determine the fate of the present form of our government. The independent, co-ordinate departments of government are now upon their trial. If Mr. Johnson is acquitted the strength of the Constitution will not only have been tested, but be greatly increased; if he shall be convicted the consequences to him will be as nothing in comparison with those involved in the paramount power thereby insured to the legislative branch of the government. Thenceforth, judging by human experience, we should be upon a sea without bottom or shore. In this critical moment it becomes all God-fearing men to invoke the overruling presence of the "One Law-giver" in that Court of Impeachment, that it may judge a righteous judgment.

CITY MONEY.

Four dollars of New Orleans city money will pay for the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for one year—that is if sent forward at once. What it will do in a month we cannot promise.

"MISSIONARIES" "IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING."

The Northern Methodist church is quite possessed with the belief that the last war was in its behalf, and that it is entitled to all the religious part of the spoils which it may choose. As it furnished the Northern army with many chaplains, and did no little at home to back up the government, and having even planned and executed a movement of its own under General Episcopal Ames, against meeting houses and parsonages in the enemy's territory, it cannot reconcile itself to the law of nations that requires that the property of individuals and corporations shall be exempt from spoliation. When the war ended these ecclesiastical raiders had just begun. The peace overtook them standing in pulpits and living in parsonages, which they hoped had come to them without labor by the same great Providence which gave the children of Israel olive trees and houses without the trouble of planting or building. The blast of the bugle which announced that the "drive" was over, and called them in, found many in hot chase on some private trail, and they were slow to hearken. Months elapsed before they could be induced to recognize the fact that peace had come. Some declared if it had, it had come "a year too soon," and others vow that it has not yet come.

Down here it was pitiable to see the tenacity with which these war "missionaries" clung to the lintels of the doors and windows of the churches from which they were being ejected. When President Johnson forced them to do that which either magnanimity or Christianity, or common honesty should have moved them to do voluntarily, they became sullen and almost vicious—very much as a wolf who has been surprised by the shepherd at the throat of a lamb, and having but tasted blood is driven off with an empty stomach. Those are the men who will not be appeased. They have not forgiven the President yet for their disappointment, and they clamor for his conviction. Scattered throughout the country, they still breathe upon the dying strife, and, with a spirit and purpose the opposite of their Divine Master's, they raise every spark to a flame. The reports which have been sent steadily from the South by these disappointed men to Northern religious journals tend more than any other cause to convince the people there that there is in the Southern people a mine of pent-up malice, which only waits an opportunity to violate all its pledges and its assent to the conditions of the surrender, which hopes to re-enslave the negro, and which is not willing to accept the recent arbitrament of the sword as a final decision upon the great political issues which evoked war. So far as we believe, know, and are capable of judging, there never was a surrender made by any people in better faith than that which the South made; and there never was a more mischievous or malicious intention than that which many of these "missionaries" have persistently shown, as newspaper correspondents, in seeking to make a different impression. We honestly believe that but for them there would be between the South and the North tenfold the unanimity, mutual forbearance, and hearty reconciliation there now is.

The Northern reader must not suppose that these "missionaries" have simply looked on and written letters, and by a sort of legitimate indirection accomplished their ends. Not so; they have gone down to the club rooms, the primary meetings, the lowest drill places, where the politician meets the negro to alternately bully and coax him into line—political sinks which spot the garments of all who venture near them. They have urged policies and dictated constitutional clauses that looked more to a petty revenge than to wholesome government; they have brought out candidates and attempted to control appointments from a commanding general's down to that of a city watchman's; they have industriously excited and arrayed the colored voter of the South against the white man, and have illustrated all the depths of a political whipper-in. Satisfied with the approbation of those who support them at the North, and who are too far off to know the real character of their labors, they have made the very name of the church they represent a stench in the nostrils of nine-tenths of the best citizens of the South, that will remain for half a century. A large mass of negroes enfranchised, and fed by various forms of bureaus, now attaches to the fortunes of these men because they think that there is both money in it and that power which they have been told they need to prevent re-enslavement. These negroes count up a tremendous "missionary" success, which draws upon the charity-feelings of the church at home like a fly-plaster; they serve a purpose for demonstrating that so many thousand members have left Southern churches and have joined Northern; but, to those who know how to "understand," as well as "read," it only indicates that the Northern Methodist church has hopelessly overwhelmed itself in the South, and has thus received the just reward of its political prostitution.

The number of "missionaries" supported by Northern Methodism who are engaged in this work of "reconstruction" is very large, averaging nearly one hundred men to each Southern State. One of its missionary secretaries, the Rev. Dr. Trimble, recently addressed the New York Conference, and said, "In the South our missions are in a very prosperous state, and if we had the means we could do more than a dozen Congresses."

We give below an illustration of this one hundred Congress-missionary power which the secretary vaunts so largely. It discovers that subtile point in common between the work of the politician and that of the "missionary," which might else have escaped detection:

SPOLIATION.—The Rev. George G. Smith, Jr., is now stationed at Lewisburg, Va., Baltimore Conference. Ordering his paper changed, he writes: "The church belonging to our people here was taken from them by the decision of a Radical judge, although there was not a single member of the church that adhered to the Northern wing of the Conference—not one single one. They have been unable, despite their mission-paid instruments, to get a single hearer from the whites outside of their board of trustees, and have turned the church over to the negroes. A number of the trustees, ashamed of holding such a trust, proposed to give me possession of the church, but a miserable tool of E. P. Phelps, presiding elder, objected so strenuously that they were forced to recede from their position."

For the Advocate.

REV. W. P. MILLER AGAIN.

In the Northwestern Christian Advocate, of March 18th, this gentleman appears in print. Bishop Clark had said, speaking of the Church Extension Society and its operations in the South:

"I do not know where else money can be used with such certainty of sure and large returns."

In many instances these opinions have been justified by the sequel. Here is an example: A short time ago Rev. W. P. Miller applied for aid, to the small amount of two hundred and fifty dollars, to secure a couple of churches in the southern part of Alabama. Not having anticipated calls for help from this region, the general committee had not set apart anything for it, but as the amount was small and the case urgent the board determined to grant the request and trust to special contributions to meet it. Asbury church, Indianapolis, has subsequently subscribed the amount and fifty dollars additional for another case. The money was forwarded to Brother Miller, and he has written to the corresponding secretary the results, as follows: "I have invested the means you sent me, and have secured the two churches of which I wrote—title all right. The churches are frame, the one 40x50, and the other 45x55 feet square, and are worth here about $1,000. They will tell on the destiny of our church here for all time to come.

"Where we get hold now we shall build permanently, and do it rapidly; but where we fail now it is likely to be years before much can be done.

"Among the whites here we have three classes: 1. Those who hold office and are called the leading men. These are generally disfranchised and are bitterly opposed to the government, and, of course, to us and to all its friends. 2. The middle classes, composed of returned rebel soldiers, farmers, etc. These, where properly instructed, are our friends. 3. The lower classes, as they are called. These are often misled by their leaders, and, moved by prejudice and passion, oppose us.

"But the colored people in this part of the State are nearly all our friends, and are very steadfast. Those who are our enemies are organizing into clubs with the design to defeat, if possible, reconstruction, and if that fails, to try to bring on a war between the races, and, if possible, make the government at Washington believe it to be the fault of the colored people, and by some measure bring about their destruction. They are forming these clubs all over the State, and are bold to say that the negroes will go like the Indians did. There is no pretext whatever for this wicked course. The colored people are as humble and industrious as any laboring class on earth, and it is a wonder even to their enemies how quiet and good they are. The real reason for this bitter hostility is that this people are in favor of reconstruction and of real union with the whole country.

"On the 21st of last October I was the only member of the Methodist Episcopal church, as far as I know, in lower Alabama and western Florida. Now, within the short period of less than four months, we have seven organized societies among the whites, over one hundred members, two local preachers, two exhorters and seven churches, all secured with the help of two hundred and fifty dollars from the Church Extension Society. Then we have two colored circuits, with two preachers which will soon number members by the hundred. Ought we not to thank God and go forward? We are very thankful for the friendship and help we have received from our brethren in the North, and if they could but know how very economical we try to be, and how their sympathies and efforts, and our self-denial and work are turning the hearts of the people back to the old government and the old church, they would bestir themselves for our help. May God bless the church and the whole country."

Passing by the misrepresentations of the people of East Alabama, leaving them to settle that matter with Mr. Miller, a man of ordinary sensibilities can but feel humiliated by the remembrance of the fact that he has been associated for years in conference relations with a teacher of the religion of Christ, who has yet such superficial views of the principles of common honesty.—There must be a great defect in our teachings somewhere, or there must be a terrible blighting power in the spirit of Northern Methodism. In poor Miller's case the disease seems to be as virulent, though taken by inoculation, as though he had had it the "natural way." In thirty years I have not known an abolitionist who could tell the truth when he touched upon the subject of slavery or the South. Such a thing was a moral impossibility. So it seems a man cannot be honest, or be an official agent of that church, especially if employed in the South. The mild and amiable Brownlow wrote home from Washington that he felt a disposition to steal as soon as he crossed the Potomac. The same unfortunate propensity seems to attack the agents of the Northern Methodist church in this country. That simple hearted, transparent, unaspiring man, Bishop Ames, was powerfully moved by it. Dr. Newman has been permeated by it for years. Nothing but the remnants of law and justice left in the land have saved him from some rare operations in this line. Poor W. P. Miller has not had time to mature in this grace, but he is a promising convert; though from Brother West's statement of the case, and from information from other sources, I think he may be "called to wade through trials." J. HAMILTON.

CONJURY.—A negro on the plantation of Geo. B. Holmes, Esq., bought some calico a few days ago and got a negro woman to make it into a spread for her bed. When it was made and slept under for the first time the owner became sick, and suspicion of conjury fell on the maker. It was said that the conjuror blew her breath three times in the middle of the spread. The excitement on the plantation was intense. On Sunday the spread was brought out and solemnly burned in the presence of several thousand free and independent voters. On yesterday the conjured woman walked to town through the rain and mud to give ten dollars to the medicine-man who cast out the evil spirits, and the woman who did the conjuring also came with her friends to be cleansed of the unclean spirit. It will cost her also ten dollars to be absolved. In the meantime the plantation is in a high state of excitement, and no work is done. It is the duty of Congress to pass a reconstruction supplemental act forbidding conjuring.—Montgomery Mail.

It is certain that the Democrats have elected the member in Franklin, and almost equally certain that the Radicals have elected the two in Carroll. This would make the House stand 48 Democrats to 53 Radicals. The West Baton Rouge member is claimed by the Republicans. If this is correct the Radicals will have seven majority in the House.

* In Avoyelles the full count showed 71 majority against the Constitution, but the registrars threw out a number of ballots sufficient to give the Radicals 21 majority. The case has been submitted to General Buchanan.—N. O. Crescent.

EARLY PIETY.—Out of 68 ministers in Philadelphia, one was converted at the age of 9 years; twenty six between the ages of 12 and 14, ten between 14 and 16, fourteen between 16 and 18, twelve between 18 and 21, and only five after they were 21.

MARRIED,

On the 2d of April, by the Rev. J. E. Treadwell, of the Mobile Conference, at the residence of Dr. W. B. Headerson, Miss CARRIE M. WOOLLEY to Mr. W. F. TREADWELL, all of Magnolia, Marengo county, Alabama.

Southern Christian Advocate and Northwestern Christian Advocate please copy.

On the 16th of April, by the same, at the residence of the bride's mother, in Eutaw, Greene county, Alabama, Miss SUE E. MCALPINE to Mr. WINFIELD S. BIRD, from near Falkland, Greene county, Alabama.

OBITUARIES.

HENRY OTEY PUGH, eldest son of Rev. J. M. and Mrs. P. V. T. Pugh, was born in Brandon, Mississippi, May 2, 1850, and died of pneumonia, after an illness of one week, in Sharon, Mississippi, March 3, 1868, in the eighteenth year of his age.

Otey was, in several respects, a remarkable youth. Trained from his infancy in the ways of piety, he showed, as he grew older, a most laudable disposition not to depart from them. In the ninth year of his age, at a meeting held in Sharon, Mississippi, he sought the Lord, and found, through Jesus Christ, the pearl of great price—the salvation which is of God, the peace that passeth understanding—and from that day forward he endeavored to serve the Lord, and be prepared for the enjoyment of heaven. He made profession of his conversion by saying: "I feel God has given me a new heart." About two years after this, in his eleventh year, while at Centenary College, he voluntarily assumed the obligations of church membership. Nor was he merely a nominal member, but manifested a readiness to discharge even the most embarrassing Christian duties, that is rarely seen in one so young. When only twelve years old he was known to speak in love-feast, when not another male person ventured to say a word for his Lord. When about the same age he opened a prayer meeting by reading, singing and prayer, though there were several older than himself present on the occasion. He has frequently been very happy at protracted meetings, and labored with the seekers of religion at the altar.

He was a youth of integrity, firmness, manliness, urbanity and conscientiousness of obligation. He was conscientious in the discharge of religious duties, bold to take up and firm to sustain the cross of Christ. He was an example to other youths. He was quiet and serious. He reproved sin among the gay and thoughtless around him. Others would often say: "We must now be serious and behave, for the parson is coming."

The influence of such a youth could not be otherwise than highly beneficial in any community. He seemed, from his early childhood, to be impressed with a profound sense of obligation to God, and acted, even in the common affairs of life, with wise reference to his overruling Providence. He no doubt felt, as he admitted to Bro. Hunnicutt, his pastor, upon inquiry, that it would be his duty to preach the gospel, though the mention or the thought of the holy office seemed to fill his soul with the deepest misgivings as to his worthiness to fill it.

During his brief illness his father, who, in the kind providence of God, was permitted to be with him, and to whisper the name of Jesus as he passed the Jordan of death, asked him: "Otey, do you love Jesus?" He replied: "I do." "Do you feel that Jesus loves you?" With emphasis he replied: "I do." "Have you felt that God has pardoned all your sins?" He answered: "I have." "Do you wish us to meet you in heaven?" He replied: "Yes." He joined in singing a portion of the hymn commencing:

"Jesus, lover of my soul."

At another time, calling to him his little brother, whom he most tenderly loved, he embraced him and said: "My dear little brother, be a good boy, and be a preacher of the gospel. May we meet in the bright world." Then calling his little sister to him, and embracing her, said: "Dear sister, be a good Christian."

While dying, his father said: "Dear Otey, if you feel all is right press my hand." He pressed it firmly, and thus passed away. During the past six years his father was absent most of the time, discharging the duties of presiding elder on large districts. This threw much responsibility on Otey, to see that family matters were attended to. He met these responsibilities in a manly way. He made the temporal wants of the family subjects of prayer in his private devotions.

His manly bearing, friendly disposition and Christian character attracted persons toward him, and made him friends wherever he became acquainted. He was the favorite of the older as well as of the younger persons of the community. All feel that they have lost a friend, and one in whom many hopes were centered. His parents, who are more specially bereaved, have the rich consolation of the gospel for their encouragement and to sustain them in their great loss. His life and faith in Christ assure them that he is at rest—that their loss is his gain. They sorrow. It is human nature to do so. It is the spontaneous outgushings of parental hearts to sorrow under such circumstances; but not as those who are destitute of the hope of the gospel. For if we believe that Jesus arose from the grave, we believe also that those who sleep in Jesus shall be raised from the dead, and enter heaven, to go out no more forever. Comfort one another with these words, saith the inspiration of God. The following lines were found in his pocket-book, which no doubt reflect the sentiments of his pious heart:

"Plant ye a tree that may bloom over me,
Sing ye a song when my grave ye shall see,
Come at the close of a bright summer day,
Come and rejoice that I thus passed away."

RAILROAD ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY are authorized by acts of Congress to construct, with the aid and supervision of the United States Government, the western and principal portion of the National Trunk Line between the Pacific coast and the Mississippi valley. They have built by far the most difficult and expensive portion of their road, and have an unprecedented working force extending the track across the Salt Lake basin. By the close of 1868 it is expected they will have 400 miles in full operation, and that

THE ENTIRE LINE WILL BE COMPLETED IN 1870.

More than Twenty Millions of Dollars have been expended in the work, and the construction resources are ample for the remainder. They consist of

1. United States Bonds to the extent of $35,000 per mile, average, delivered as the work progresses.

2. First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, issued also according to the progress of the road, and having the preferred claim—superior to that of the Government.

3. Grant of Public Lands along the route, 12,800 acres per mile; or nearly ten million acres in all, which are now selling at the minimum rate of $2 50 per acre.

4. Capital stock of $20,000,000, of which $5,000,000 is subscribed and paid on the work done.

5. Cash resources, comprising donations from California sources amounting to $1,250,000, net earnings, etc., 1865 to 1870, $6,500,000, making a total of more than

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.: I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely. The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair

Your's, very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', Mass., June 9, '64.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than formerly. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair. With respect,
WM. S. EDDY.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

FLEETING and FALLING LEAVES.

Now the leaves on the wall,
Withering, with the leaves that fall
In showers from every tree—
Down the glory of the year
Flutters on the wind and hurry by
On the morning wings and the Sleeping sound and sound they rest
And a mourn—one night, dank
From the mildew that are made,
Every bank put whitened
Sighs to lofty winter sending
To the year we world descending,
Fast, fly wave and mute,
In the wavering parachute.
—But the leaves, how one many
Over the meadows, pave and dance
Fleet at me and then so fallow,
Just as light and just as yellow.
There are many now—how one—
Now they stop and there are now:
What arrangement of device
Is her upward eye of fire

Were a sparrow laid by
How one moves the quiling joy,
Less it go so fast, and then
How it is her power upon;
How the world with them is dear.
Upon us in fields conjure;
Quite us in in fields of art.
Far beyond in joy of heart.
Were her action played in the eye
Of a constant mastership,
Clapping hands with shouts and cries,
What would little Tabby care
For the plaudits of the crowd?
Over happy to be proud,
Over weighty in the treasure
Of her own exceeding pleasure!

SETTING OUT PLANTS.

In the very crisis of the work Sam went away; just as Lily said, when everything wanted him. There were more seeds to sow, and there were young plants to put out; above all, there were weeds which must not be put out. For even in those little flower pots in the boxes weeds grew, fast and thick, and must be constantly pulled up. This was easy enough when the flower plants were there too, and the children soon learned to know many of the rightful owners of the soil; but in a pot where the weeds sprang first, before the flowers, there was great need of care. And there was nobody to consult with now; Sam was to be gone a month, and no one else could take his place, so the children were obliged to make use of all the wits they had. What grave questions arose, and were debated there in the window-seat! as, whether it was yet too cold to plant out the little seedlings; whether they needed water, and the like. Mrs. May told them she had always heard that most young plants should not be transplanted until they had their second pair of leaves; but it seemed as if these never would come, and besides, who could tell whether this precious selection could be fairly classed under the head of 'most young plants?' So the discussions were endless.

Then Mr. May, looking over the boxes one morning, affirmed that they had too much heat, and that Lily's flax and other things were running up as tall and slim as she was herself, instead of being stout, thrifty plants.

'But what shall we do with 'em, papa?' said Lily.

'Take them out of the boxes and set them on a table, I should,' said Mr. May. 'They want air, poor things!'

Now it was not endurable to have such plants called 'poor things;' so at once the pots were taken out, and all the boxes set away, though Clover's mind was not at all at rest on the subject. Primrose had been quite uneasy about her ipomœas, which after that first cracking of the ground above their heads had made little progress; and she had (quite privately) given that particular flower-pot more than one decided watering or soaking; and still the plants did not come.

But the work out-of-doors began to be the most interesting now; and each child went about it so entirely after her own fashion that the gardens were, as Mr. May had said, a study. Clover, as usual, was perfectly neat and methodical—in her garden, as elsewhere, all she touched fell into order, as if under the wand of the old fairy herself. She had found a neglected basket in the garret, wide and long, without a cover, and with a handle; and this basket being the desire of nobody else, became straightway the comfort of Clover. She dusted it, and washed it, and rubbed it up, tying some of her own odds and ends of red ribbon at the handle, both to cover up some breaks and damages, and to take off the look of a common basket, which it undeniably had. Then with labels and papers of seeds at one end, and her little trowel in the other, Clover went to her garden in full content of heart, and sowed and planted with a precision which few people ever attempted before. True, Sam had told her that it was best to sow the seeds rather thicker than the plants must stand, for some might not grow, and some young plants might die—they could be thinned out afterward to the proper distance. But still Clover believed in her heart that it was best to sow with the utmost regularity, putting seeds at precisely the right distance, and if the plants were small enough to use first, and nobody was disappointed, so much the better. Her neat-handed, deft manner of doing everything (of course no very small seeds are to be planted in this way, and even Clover at a moment of thought and consideration knew that when they are to be set anywhere further taken, too, lay a neat list of all the kinds she had, each one marked 'two feet' or 'six inches high' or 'trailing,' along with exactly calculated signs that the flower would be blue, white or yellow. Some were in the pots for the house, some here in the basket; and the arranging of colors and the placing of tall plants in the centre, and of vines by the fence of single plants here, and of masses there, gave Clover's patient imagination more work than I can tell you.

Nothing of this sort went on in Lily's sphere. Lily stuffed her pocket with seed-bags, caught up her trowel in one hand and her bonnet in the other, rushed down to her garden as if the whole spring work rested on her little shoulders, and then sowed and labeled with infinite zeal indeed, but without a particle of consideration. She would finish off more patches in ten minutes than Clover in a whole morning's work; and her seeds had all been planted some days before Clover entrusted the last of her treasures to the brown earth, 'in hope of a glorious resurrection.'

Little Primrose, on her part, managed her garden as she did everything else, in a sort of a rosy dream—it was all poetry to Primrose, though she did not know it. No common questions about color and height ever troubled her head. She had studied the catalogue descriptions until each flower was personified to her thoughts, and the point was not at all whether datura and œnothera would contrast well if planted near together, but each must be placed for its own sake; the œnotheras must show their wonderful white flowers here, close by the green grass border, and a little withdrawn from public observation, and the pansies must stand here, where mamma could see them from the bow-window. So Prim planted and mused, and mused and planted, and lived a garden life that was about half dream and half sunlight.

Great was the joy when Sam came home, bringing with him the three rose bushes—a white, a crimson and a blush. Each was leading a rather weary existence in a flower pot just then, and looked faint-hearted accordingly; but Sam said they were good, strong plants, and would grow well as soon as they had a chance.

'I shall put mine in the very middle of my garden—the beauty!' said Lily.

'I shall put mine close to the walk, so that I can smell the roses,' said Primrose.

Clover said nothing, but she thought of a place between her sweet alyssum and mignonette—the very place of places for a rose! and her cheeks glowed with pleasure.

'Now we can use our spades,' said Lily, 'to dig the holes.'

Sam said nothing to dispute that; but when they all went out next morning, carrying the roses, he took his spade too, and his wheelbarrow; and when Lily had dug a hole about the size of the flower pot that held her rose, Sam fell to work, nor ever stopped till he made the hole at least a foot deep and more than that across.

'If you think I'm going to plant my rose down there,' said Lily, 'you're just mistaken. I know better.'

'It's worse than my sweet peas,' said Primrose.

Sam laughed and bade them have patience; and then he threw in a quantity of black stuff from his wheelbarrow, filling the hole half full. Upon this again he threw some of the earth that lay round the edge of the hole, and then mixed the whole well together, digging it up again and again.

'Now you can plant your rose,' he said to Lily.

'Sam, what was all that for?' said Clover.

'Roses are great feeders—they want a very rich soil, well prepared. Lily, don't pull your rose out of the pot—you'll break off all the roots.'

There seemed some danger of that, indeed, for Lily had taken her rose by the stem and was trying to shake the pot off.

'How am I to get it out, then?' she said, setting down the unfortunate rose. 'It sticks.'

'Sticks!' said Sam; 'of course it does; the earth is full of little roots, all matted and twined together. See—take this old knife and slip it round the edge—so—as close to the pot as possible. Now lay your hand close on the top of the pot, with the rose stem between your fingers—so. Hold it right, and with your other hand gently turn the pot upside down—there—you see the rose with its ball of earth is safe in your left hand, and the pot is home and can be taken away.'

'Why, how nice!' said Lily. 'But the hole—it crumbles all to pieces.'

'That's because you spoke it so impatiently to put the first rose in. Never mind—just look how beautiful the hole is now. But I'll let it crumble any more than I can help, and put the rose in the middle of it, and fill the earth up round it—there—and tread it down—so—and there it is! the rose is in the world again; that part of the rose where the stem rises from the root—the crown it is called—must be just at the surface of the earth. Now water the roots nicely, and make all even and smooth; and when you will want to take your rake and rake out our footsteps, and put things in neat order again.'

'I should think so!' said Lily. 'What a mess!'

'What have you been planting here?' said Sam, walking round the garden and looking at some tiny green things that stood labeling their beds badly.

'Oh-ah, and things,' said Lily. 'Those are pinks.'

'But what makes them droop so?—did you treat them as you did your rose?'

'I pulled them up, of course,' said Lily. 'There was nothing else I could do. They had to be separated.'

'But pulling them up breaks up the little precious roots. How did you do with yours, Clover?'

'I tried a tea-spoon first,' said Clover, blushing; 'and then I thought that was too large, and I got a little, little flat stick, and stuck that down into the pot like a spade.'

'Very good,' said Sam. 'Lily, did you water your plants?'

'Oh, yes, the minute I'd set 'em out,' said Lily.

'And shaded them?'

'No, I didn't know anything about that,' said Lily. 'I just gave 'em a good soaking at the time, and then every morning since.'

'Ah!' said Sam, 'they look like it. Flowers, like some other people, often need less defense from their enemies than their friends. Now take a lesson for next time. Take up each little plant very carefully—Clover has told you how—with as much earth as possible about its roots. Then dig a hole a little larger than the plant, and set it in, spreading out the roots, or arranging them as naturally as possible; hold up the plant quite straight, and throw the earth in very gently, and press it lightly down. Then water it gently and thoroughly, and if it is a sunny day, shade it with an old flower pot, or a bit of shingle, or even a hood of paper held in a split stick. Shade it for several days, but always uncover it by night, that the plant may have dew and fresh air. Set out your plants, if you can, just before a rain; but if they need farther watering, give it to them just at evening, after the sun is off.'

'Well!' said Lily, 'I suppose Clover will put all that in her head, but it's by no means certain that I shall in mine. Now let's go and plant the other roses.'

'Sam,' said Clover as they walked off, 'what made you cut off that piece of Lily's rose-root?'

'It was broken,' said Sam; 'and a broken root does only harm. Any broken or bruised root should be cut smoothly off before planting.'—The Three Little Spades.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

CHEAP RICE PUDDING.—Wash a quarter of a pound of rice well, and tie it in a cloth with half a pound of stoned raisins, allowing sufficient room for the rice to swell. Boil two hours; then turn into a dish, and pour sweet sauce over it, with or without a little nutmeg.

LADY DERBY'S SOAP.—Take two ounces of bitter almonds, one ounce and a half of tincture of benjamin, one pound of curd soap, and a small piece of camphor. Blanch the almonds, and beat them with the camphor to a paste in a mortar, adding a few drops of water; then add the soap cut into fine shavings.

SODA CAKE.—Take one pound of flour, a quarter of a pound of butter, a quarter of a pound of brown sugar, half a pound of currants, two ounces of candied lemon peel, a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, and a pint and a half of milk. Mix well, and bake for an hour in a mold. It is better when kept for a few days.

GILT PICTURE FRAMES.—To prevent flies from soiling the gilding, cover the frames with strips of tissue paper or gauze. Linen takes off the gilding or deadens its brightness, and should never be used for wiping it. If very dirty, the frames may be washed with soap and water and a sponge. In ordinary cases, however, a cotton rag dipped in oil will be found best.

PICKLE FOR TONGUES.—Rub six neats' tongues with sugar two days; then rub them with common salt and pounded saltpeter for two days more, and make the following pickle: Water and porter, each one quart; saltpeter, a quarter of a pound; bay salt, two pounds and the spices first used.

Sprinkle with pepper, and put in a pan with the pickle; turn them every day, and they will be fit to use in a week or ten days. Before cooking, wash them well, and boil them in a pot of water, with plenty of vegetables. Do what you like with the liquor it was boiled in, but do not use it for soup.

These pickled tongues are delicious cold. Take them out, trim off the roots, and put them in a dish, with a paper round them, while you wash out the pot and make clear; press them to keep in shape, and serve cold.

PIGEON PIE.—Cut into quarters two young pigeons, and rub them with pepper, salt and herb seasoning; cut also into four pieces a pound of thick round steak, which lay at the bottom of the dish. Boil four eggs ten minutes, and take out the hard yolks, which lay between the pigeons upon the steak; pour in a gill of gravy or water, cover with puff paste, and in a hole in the center, put three pigeon feet, carefully cleaned and baked. Some prefer cutting the pigeons in half and adding a few slices of lean ham, or the egg yolks may be beaten in a mortar, and mixed with herbs and seasoning, and made into balls, or mixed with the parboiled liver of the pigeons and used as stuffing. Lay steak over as well as under the pigeons.

HOW TO OVERTURN THE PULPIT.—Spurgeon says: It might be done by putting empty-headed men in the pulpit—men who had nothing to say, and said it, or frothy, feathery men—men who would introduce a joke in the pulpit for joking's sake, and who, not being particularly conscious of any other mission in the world, made themselves generally agreeable, and thought that sufficient. Iron men, too, were dangerous in the pulpit—men who, in preaching the wrath of God, did it without a tear—men who would discuss and wrangle, clear-headed, but cold and hard, like a snowy night with the moon shining. Then there were idle men. Idle students were bad enough; but idle ministers—what should he say of them? There were also what he called men of putty—men who were influenced by everybody, and had no opinions except those of the last person whom they met. There were starch brethren—men wrapped in dignity, who came from the pulpit and walked down the aisle, their minds absorbed by heavenly contemplation. Finally, there were weather-cock brethren—men whose religious opinions veered with the prevailing doctrinal current in their neighborhood—men who, in their time, had boxed the spiritual compass, and said that every point was the North Pole. Of course he spoke of these as curiosities; probably no one present had ever met them. He then spoke of some of the qualifications for pulpit efficiency: an unflinching faithfulness to ourselves and to others, whether saints or sinners; an increasing spirituality, pervading predominance of the spiritual element in our nature, intense labor, thorough sincerity, prayer and love for souls and for our work. This was the main thing, to preach more Christ, and preach like Christ, as he did, to put in plenty of metaphors, and to speak loudly and earnestly. Especially in the inner life must we be like Christ.

It is a sad, heavy thing to do anything in obedience to God while the heart is not enlarged toward him by his divine love; but that once taking possession of and enlarging the heart, that inward principle of obedience makes the outward obedience sweet; it is then a natural motion. Indeed, the soul runs in the ways of God, as the sun in his course, which finds no difficulty, being naturally fitted and carried to that motion; he "goes forth as a bridegroom, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race."—Leighton.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1858.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev. J. E. C. Ivemeus, D.D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 32d parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its bounds, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not; to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging delegations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word; no tampering with the text; no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove,

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial of all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $1 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This Invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no material change to notice in the leading features of the general market since our last review. The demand for flour and grain has been quite limited, without any change as to prices, and the market has also been rather inactive for provisions, though holders exhibit much firmness, generally, and the tendency of prices is upward. There has been rather more doing in sugar and molasses, more particularly in the former, though the business, except in a more retail way, was confined to the product of Cuba, owing to the scarcity of Louisiana. There is a less general demand for dry goods and groceries, though some dealers are experiencing a moderately fair trade. Our principal staple, cotton, has been in good demand at moderately improved prices, and the stocks in the hands of receivers are being much diminished.

Cotton.—In our last review we said that the cotton market had closed with great firmness, and with occasional sales above our quotations, which were for Good Ordinary 29½c. to 30c. Low Middling 30½ to 31, and for Middling 31½ to 32. The telegrams from Liverpool on Saturday were very favorable, reporting that market as active and buoyant, at a further material advance in prices. These accounts gave at once a decided impetus to the demand here, and there was a prospect at one time that a large business would be done; but owing to the largely advanced prices which holders insisted on getting, business was checked considerably. The sales of the day, nevertheless, amounted to about 3,400 bales, at an irregular advance, but ranging from ½ to 1 cent on the rates current on Friday. On Monday the sales were restricted to about 2,500 bales.—Prices ruled about the same as on Saturday. Tuesday morning's telegrams not coming fully up to the expectations of buyers, they showed no disposition to continue purchasing at the rates current on the day previous, and the evening dispatches, quoting Middling Uplands at 12⅞ and Orleans at 13½d., being less favorable still, caused them generally to retire from the market. The sales during the day reached about 300 bales. As usual under similar circumstances, the market had an appearance of weakness, but such was not its real position, however, as holders, in view of the small stocks which they held, and a belief in limited supplies for the future, were quite firm at the closing rates of Monday, which we quote below.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,200 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 3,020 bales, against 2,929 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 91 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 570,084 bales, against 659,437 bales the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 348,518 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 111,960 bales to Great Britain, of 41,545 to France, and of 113,450 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —

Sugar.—There is nothing doing in Louisiana sugar, excepting a limited retail business at 13¾c. per lb. for fair, 15½c. for prime, 16½c. for yellow clarified, and 17¼c. for white. Five hogsheads cistern bottom sold at 7½c. per lb. The market for Cuba sugar is very dull. There were sales, however, of 100 hogsheads, Nos. 15 to 16, at 13c., and 200 hogsheads Porto Rico at — per lb.

Molasses.—Refinery reboiled commands 75 to 85c.; golden syrup $1 to $1 10 per gallon. Cuba molasses is offered in small lots at 45c. per gallon.

Flour.—The market shows very little animation. Superfine is scarce and in some request at comparatively good prices, but the grades above are plenty and dull at lower rates.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

POSITIVE CURE

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 43 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 15, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Collier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable:

The following is signed by most respectable citizens of Wynn parish, Louisiana:

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose: till, hearing of Dr T S Collier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Collier can cure any case of Cancer

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FULL DETAILS OF GEN. NAPIER'S VICTORY OVER THE ABYSSINIANS.

We copy the following dispatches from the Western press:

LONDON, April 26.—Still later advices from Abyssinia, dated at Zoula, on the 18th of April, have been received here. The very latest reports had at that point, from the scene of action in Magdala, represent that 14,000 native troops had laid down their arms to Napier, and that Theodore had four hundred soldiers killed and fifteen hundred wounded in the engagement.

Advices from Napier's headquarters, in Magdala, without date, are also at hand. They state that the Europeans lately held captive there, numbering sixty souls, including men, women and children, were already on the route to Zoula for home, and that the entire force of Theodorus' army had been either killed, wounded or captured.

LONDON, April 26.—Two dispatches from Gen. Napier have been received by Sir Stafford Northcote. The first, which is without date, says: "An engagement took place before Magdala on Good Friday. The king was defeated with heavy loss. Our loss was fifteen wounded, rank and file; no killed. During the next two days the king gave up all the European captives and employes, but has not surrendered himself, and I have given him twenty-four hours to decide whether he will do so or not. His troops are demoralized."

The second dispatch, March 14, says: "Theodorus' army was disheartened by the severe losses of the 10th. Some of the chiefs surrendered the most formidable position of Chilassa, and many thousand men laid down their arms. The king retired into Magdala with those who remained faithful. Magdala was taken by assault on the 13th, under cover of Armstrong steel guns, the 8-inch mortars and rocket battery. The ascent to the gates of the fort was the most formidable. King Theodorus was killed while defending the place to the last. Our loss is small. The army will return to-morrow."

BASHELO RIVER, April 8.—A second reconnoissance to the front toward Magdala was made to-day. The king has twenty-eight guns mounted outside. Gen. Napier has sent him a letter demanding the release of the captives. Our army is concentrated on the river. Scaling ladders and torpedoes have been got ready for an attack on the fortress.

BEFORE MAGDALA, April 10.—The army has arrived here, six miles from the fortress. The king's camp is on a great height, in full view of our forces.

MAGDALA, April 13.—The temporary truce ended this morning. The king refused to surrender the prisoners. Gen. Napier, with the First and Second Brigades, moved up the hill in front. Scalesse surrendered without resistance. The king retreated into Magdala, and planted five guns at the base of the wall. When Napier came in sight the king opened on him with these guns. The English replied from a 12-pound Armstrong gun and 7-pounder, and with rockets. The king abandoned his guns and barricaded the sally-ports of the town wall, keeping up a fire of musketry. A bombardment by the British for three hours followed, when Gen. Napier ordered the men to advance, and the town was carried by assault after vigorous resistance on the part of the enemy.

The king's loss was sixty-eight killed and two hundred wounded. The British loss was fifteen wounded, rank and file. The king was found dead, shot through the head. Some say he was killed in the battle, while others assert that he committed suicide. His two sons were taken prisoners. All the European prisoners were liberated.

The interior of the king's stronghold presented an extraordinary scene of barbaric splendor. The troops plundered the place. They found there four royal crowns of gold, $20,000 in silver, valuable plate, rich jewels, etc. Among the trophies captured are twenty-eight cannon, five thousand stand of arms, ten thousand shields, ten thousand spears, and a large quantity of other material of war.

The British captives leave for home to-morrow. The army will return at once to the seaboard.

LONDON, April 27.—Evening.—Great joy prevails throughout the nation over the news from the British troops in Abyssinia and the safety of Prince Alfred. To-day was observed as an impromptu holiday. At the Stock Exchange national hymns were sung and enthusiastic cheers for the Queen were given. The press and the people everywhere are exultant.

INTERESTING DEBATE IN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT ON THE IRISH CHURCH QUESTION.

A London dispatch of the 1st contains the following:

In the debate on the Irish church, in the House of Commons, last evening, Mr. Walpole, in the coarse of his remarks in opposition to Mr. Gladstone's resolves, said: "These attacks on a clergy such as that of the Irish church, who are noted for the purity of their doctrine and for their elevated bearing and Christian zeal, were sure to lead to the most disastrous results."

Lord Elcho said the introduction of the resolves at the present time was unnecessary and unfortunate. The Roman Catholics of Ireland would never be satisfied with anything short of supremacy in ecclesiastical matters. He regarded the issue presented to the House as important, for the church establishments of England and Scotland were menaced as that of Ireland. These blows were struck at the whole system of the union of church and state in the United Kingdom.

At a late hour, in the presence of a full House, Mr. Gladstone rose and was loudly cheered. He commenced by saying he could not complain of the result of the long debate. These eleven nights of discussion had fully demonstrated that the Irish church establishment never did and never could fulfill the end of its creation. It was not the church of the nation. It was not the church of the poor, nor was it a missionary church. It existed only for the purpose of sustaining political supremacy, in a form most hateful to the people upon which it was imposed.

This was unendurable. No minister dared say it should continue to exist. Now was the time to apply the remedy. The ministry had raised the question, and broached a policy in regard to it upon which they subsequently failed to agree. He would say nothing concerning the disposal of the church property in Ireland, for more and better information was needed on a question involving interests so extensive. Our duty was to accord justice to Ireland.

Mr. Gladstone then alluded to the personal attacks which had been made upon him, and denied in the most explicit manner that he had any connection with or interest in the policy or places either of the ritualists or Roman Catholics. Discussing the arguments made against his propositions, he said two objections had been made to his plan for the disestablishment of the Irish church. One was, it imperiled the existence of the established church in England. The other, that the time was inopportune. For ten years, he said, the people of Great Britain were indifferent. Then the introduction of a great reform would have been unthinkly. Now the people were aroused, and the opportunity presented itself for an early and sound settlement of the question. The strength of the Church of England is her own merits, and in the voluntary zeal of her votaries, far more than in her connection with the state. He expressed the belief that the Church of England would lose none of her strength even if parted from the state. She had more to fear from her partisans than from her foes, and the reform of the Irish established church would strengthen the Church of England.

Mr. Disraeli rose amid the excited cheers of the House to reply and close the debate. He deplored the act of injustice contemplated by these resolves. It was an act which involved a wide confiscation of property and menaced the rights of every corporation and of every question in the United Kingdom. It must predispose the public mind for a similar attack upon the Church of England, and it undoubtedly was intended to have such an influence. But in spite of the press and pressure brought to bear by the advocates of the change, he firmly believed the English people would never sanction the sacrifice of sacred things to party necessities, leading, as it was sure to lead, to results only to be described as revolutionary.

At half past two this morning the House divided on the first of Mr. Gladstone's resolves, and the count stood as follows: for the resolve, 330; against, 265; majority, 65.

The announcement was received with loud and prolonged cheering from the Liberal benches.

Mr. Disraeli then rose, and, amid the most profound silence, said this decision altered the relations of the ministry and the House of Commons. The government needed time to decide what action it would take. He accordingly moved that the House adjourn until Monday.

The motion was carried, and at 3 A. M. the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Impeachment Court.—Bingham disavowed partisan prejudices—was there as a representative of the people. He applied the term hired frequently to the President's counsel, and said that Evarts' speech had in it more Latin than law, more rhetoric than logic, and more intellectual pyrotechnics than either. He argued that the President had no right to construe laws, and that the Supreme Court had no possible jurisdiction in the case.

He narrated Lincoln's assassination and incidents from the fugitive slave law and its operations. He said the gentleman who opened this case claimed that the President may judicially construe the Constitution for himself, and may determine whether your laws are passed under the Constitution, and whether he shall execute them. Mr. Bingham repeated this that it might be buried into the hearts of the Senators. The laws were only to be executed if it pleased his highness, Andrew Johnson, first king of the United States. If the President can do this, as insisted on by his advocates, Mr. B. insisted that the Constitution which he had been taught to revere as the bulwark of our liberties, is a Constitution which invites violation of the law, not obedience to it; and he insisted further that if Senators, by their judgment, should countenance this, they would be the architects of their own ruin. They would give over this land to endless chaos and anarchy. No matter what demagogues may say about it, out of this chamber, the issue is anarchy in this land, and the recording angel of history is ready to trace it. That is all of it. It is the head and front of Andrew Johnson's offending, that he has assumed to himself the prerogative of interpreting the Constitution, and deciding upon the laws for himself. In spite of all the lawyer's tricks, in spite of all the technicalities, this was it. With all respect to Senators and to the able counsel, after the weeks and weeks of discussion on this case, if there is one man who does not understand this simple proposition, then God, in his infinite wisdom, has denied him reason.

House.—A committee of seven, with power to send for persons and papers, was appointed in the Donnelly and Washburn case.

A motion to expunge Saturday's proceedings from the record caused much excitement, but was withdrawn, after Donnelly and Washburn had withdrawn offensive remarks.

Pending a motion to adjourn, Donnelly asked leave that Washburn and he might imitate Thomas and Stanton and take a drink. Washburn proclaimed himself a temperance man.

CHICAGO, May 5.—To-day's session of the Methodist Episcopal Conference was largely occupied with the presentation of memorials, petitions, and remonstrances on the subject of lay representation. At 10 o'clock, the order of the day being the Episcopal Address, that document was read by Bishop Simpson. It is a very able document, touching upon most of the interests of the denomination. Its reading was listened to with attention.

In reference to the organization of a mission conference in the recent slave States, the address contains full information, and recommends the admission of their delegates to membership.

In the South there are now 550 ministers and 17,00 members. The church at large has 11,121 houses of worship, valued at nearly $6,000,000.

On the subject of lay representation it expresses the opinion that its importance demands careful consideration.

The address gives a very flattering account of the affairs of the church during the past four years.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The American Medical Association, now in convention in this city, and numbering between two and three hundred, called in a body to-night upon the President, Speaker Colfax and Chief Justice Chase.

The reception by each of these high officials was quite brilliant. The White House was thrown open, as is customary on occasions of grand receptions, and all the reception rooms were brilliantly illuminated with gas. Secretary Seward, and Mrs. Patterson and Mrs. Stover, assisted the President in doing the honors to the guests.

Speaker Colfax was assisted by Mrs. and Miss Mathews, and the Chief Justice was aided by his accomplished daughters, Mrs. Sprague and Miss Chase, in extending the hospitalities and courtesies to the distinguished guests.

The following are the appointments of midshipmen at large for the year eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, just ordered by the President: Nathaniel T. James, California; Rogers H. Galt, Virginia; John C. Fremont, Jr., son of officer; Robt. H. Fletcher, do; Lewis Pitcher, do; Jacob Medary, Ohio; Daniel F. Baker, Maine; Thos. F. Dixon, Pennsylvania; Charles T. Fox, son of officer; Wm. Polmyer, Maryland.

The President also ordered that George D. McCarty be transferred from cadet engineer.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—In the Impeachment Court, Bingham argued that evil intent was not necessary to conviction; said that the counsel's argument on this subject was puerile and not fit for the ears of the Senate. He maintained the unity of the appointing and removal power; said that undue weight had been given to the debates of '96, and maintained that maladministration was impeachable.

He held that Sherman's remarks regarding cabinet officers were not applicable, because when the bill passed the malignity and dangerous character of the President had not been developed. He defended Stanton as a calumniated and slandered officer, who had proved faithful among the faithless, and as one who, in all the qualities which adorn and ennoble human nature, was unexcelled in any age or country.

He characterized the quo warranto arguments as mere babble in the ears of the Senate. He regarded the constitutionality of the tenure-of-office act as a closed question, and said that after voting on it three times, Senators who questioned its constitutionality were themselves impeachable. Bingham concludes to-morrow.

It is stated that Henderson, Fessenden and Grimes have each prepared an opinion looking to acquittal. This is improbable, but betters on conviction are holding off.

Nothing has transpired regarding the routine to-morrow after Bingham closes. He will close about 2 o'clock.

This evening's Express says the feeling to-day among the Radicals, as well as Democrats, is that the chances are decidedly in favor of acquittal of the President.

This evening's Star says the bears have it in impeachment stock to-day. Bets of two to one for acquittal are offered, and why, nobody knows.

It is stated that a majority of the Reconstruction Committee favor the admission of the Arkansas delegation on the completion of the impeachment trial.

The President transmitted the South Carolina and Arkansas constitutions to the House. Referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

LONDON, May 5.—The ministry have resigned. Disraeli proposed to compromise until after the election on the Reform bill, but Lord Stanley and Earl Malmesbury refuse to serve under Disraeli.

The Queen has sent for Gladstone.

Gladstone said in the House that it was unprecedented for a ministry beaten by twenty-five majority to think of dissolving Parliament.

The premier's course was unconstitutional. The House was hostile to the ministry. The duty of the Liberals was clearly to follow up resolves by action. They must go on. [Cheers.] They had no bargains to make.

John Bright said Disraeli asked the House to reverse constitutional usage that he might keep an office got by arts not the most worthy.

Disraeli asked why the House had not passed a vote of want of confidence.

The debate on the Irish church question is fixed for May next.

The new ministry is not yet formed.

LONDON, May 5.—The Queen refused to accept Disraeli's resignation, and the dissenting members of the ministry agreed under the circumstances to continue in office.

Parliament will be dissolved in autumn, when the new franchise bill comes into operation.

LONDON, May 5, midnight.—In the House of Commons Gladstone referred to the Duke of Richmond's assertion, in the House of Lords, that the Queen left it to the ministry to dissolve Parliament whenever they pleased. He said such a power was unconstitutional, as it left the ministry at liberty to deal with questions that have not yet arisen. He asked for an explanation of that statement, and contradicted Disraeli's statement in the House.

Disraeli said there was no discrepancy between his statements. He had offered to resign, but the Queen declined it. His advice to the Queen was to dissolve Parliament when business permitted. Disraeli stated that the right to dissolve Parliament was only reserved in case an issue on the Irish church question should be pushed by the others.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—There is more excitement about impeachment to-night than has been manifested since the commencement of the trial. Rumors of the most extravagant character abound. What this Senator has done, what that one has said, what others propose to do, as to one or more of the articles of impeachment, are the topics of discussion in secret conclaves; and openly in the hotels and upon the streets there is much talk of bets and banter, offers of wagers as to the verdict, but there does not appear to be a great amount of money put up.

The impression among the best informed generally is that the President will be acquitted. The impeachers have taken fresh courage to-day upon the divulgment of a compact entered into by Wade, Colfax and Wilson, severally candidates for Vice President, whereby it is agreed that at the proper or auspicious moment before the close of the impeachment that Wade will resign as President pro tem. of the Senate and vote for conviction of the President.

Colfax thus becomes the successor of Mr. Johnson in case the latter is removed, and thereupon Colfax withdraws from competition for Vice President. In this event Wilson is to write a letter declining the nomination, and Colfax and Wilson will support Wade for the nomination for Vice President before the Chicago Convention.

This plan is arranged, among other things, for the purpose of neutralizing the opposition to Wade on the part of certain Senators, who, it is alleged, will vote for acquittal. If Wade continues to be prospective successor to Johnson, or Wade being out of the way, the Senators will vote for conviction.

Though there was by the parties great faith placed in the result of this compact, it does not appear that it has produced the desired effect, and the so-called doubtful Senators yet refuse to become parties to the plan, and continue, as heretofore, doubtful or non-committal, which is construed to mean that they will try the case and render a verdict upon their conscientious convictions of the law and the testimony.

The Radicals have an immense lobby in attendance to urge a conviction, many of whom gain admittance upon the floor of the Senate. Among those upon the floor to-day were Theodore Tilton and Geo. Wilkes, the latter being seated in a Senator's chair.

It is not expected that a verdict will be rendered until next week.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Grant sent a message to Congress, covering communications from Canby, detailing the evil effects of compelling State officers of North and South Carolina to take the test oath. Many good men, acting with the Union party, cannot take it; other good men, who could, decline taking it, feeling that unworthy motives would be attributed to them. Grant expresses no opinion on the subject; he merely transmits Canby's letter.

The protest of the white people of South Carolina against the constitution was referred to the Reconstruction Committee.

LONDON, May 6.—Division on the balance of Gladstone's resolves is expected to-morrow.

There was an immense meeting to-day at St. James' Hall in favor of continuing the Irish church. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided, and many eminent tories were on the stand. The Lord Mayor offered a series of resolutions favoring the continued union of the church and state, which were seconded by the Bishop of Oxford.

The Archbishop of York offered a series of resolutions, declaring that it was an attack on the English church and a movement to establish the papacy.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 6.—The Legislature adjourned sine die to-day. The assembly passed the following: The evidence elicited at President Johnson's trial has established the innocence of that high functionary.

His conviction would be regarded by the people as a false judgment of a partisan court, and as a crime against the form and being of a republican government.

HYMNS AND HYMN-MAKERS.—We have many noble hymns in our language, but these hymns are not the work of our great poets. Milton never wrote a hymn in the modern acceptation of the word; and his version of some of the Psalms is about, if not quite, as feeble as the version of Tate and Brady. Pope produced one hymn remarkable for vapid thought and overstrained sentiment. Thomson, like Coleridge, wrote a grand piece in blank verse which he calls a hymn; but it may be more justly termed a sacred poem. Moore and Byron tried to compose hymns, and failed ignominiously. Wordsworth and Tennyson have not tried at all. Mrs. Browning in early life composed one at least not unworthy of her genius; but she withdrew it from publication, and it is unknown to readers of her works. The "Book of Praise," which, with some grievous deficiencies, is perhaps the best hymn-book in the language, contains a few written by poets; but the most popular hymns in the collection, and the hymns most worthy of being popular, are the production of versifiers who are unknown in the world of poetry. The fact, we think, is incontestible; but the reason for the fact is not very obvious. Our greatest poets—Spencer, Milton, Wordsworth, for example—are in the highest sense of the term religious poets. Yet they could not write hymns; while men of slight genius, but much fervor, like Toplady, Wesley and Watts, have produced some that bid fair to last as long as the Paradise Lost itself. There is no species of composition more affectionately received, or more likely to confer permanent popularity on the author, than a good hymn; but this kind of immortality is seldom granted to the poets.—London Express.

RITUALISM BEARING FRUIT.—The Bishop of London, in a recent speech, said: Only that morning he received letters from two curates of his diocese, informing him that they had joined the Church of Rome. And this was the case with many. They dwelt so long on these doctrines and practices that at last they began to look upon the system of their own church as one of subtlety, and at last left altogether. Only two weeks ago some ladies, given to good works, made a request to him that the reserved elements should always be present in their chapel; because, it was urged, that it would be a blessing to be able always to offer up prayer before the present Lord. That might be transubstantiation or not, but he was very certain that it was not the doctrine of the Church of England. He said he could not give his sanction to anything of the kind, and since that time those sisters had joined the Church of Rome. The bishops would be traitors to the church if they allowed these things to go on, to sap the foundations of the faith.

At the late annual meeting of evangelical clergymen at Islington, too, Rev. Mr. Ryle said: "Ritualism was gradually robbing the church of some of its best members among the laity. Bankers, lawyers, doctors, members of Parliament, were dropping off and leaving the ship; they could not understand an established church, in which the service was Popish in one parish and Protestant in another. Some of them were going off to the Plymouth Brethren, some to the Baptists, Methodists, or Independents, and some stood aloof altogether, and would take no part in church affairs."

THE trial of the rector of the notorious ritualizing church of St. Albans, London, has been concluded, and the Court of Arches have decided, first, that the elevation of the post is illegal, and must be discontinued; second, that the court could not judge whether kneelings and prostrations in the public services were excessive—that was to be judged by the bishop; third, that burning incense is "innocent and pleasing," but the censer must not be swung so as to cense the communicants; fourth, that the mixing of water with the wine during the celebration of the sacrament was an innovation and must not be repeated; fifth, that two lighted candles and no more are allowable, as indicating that Christ is the light of the world. The points are merely formal, and the practices puerile. But it is a very small question how many pounds of wax may be consumed, compared with the question whether religion has anything to do with forms, or is a matter of the heart. Technically the decision is against, but practically in favor of the ritualists.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

OBSERVATIONS OF A COLPORTEUR.—THIRTY DAYS IN PIKE COUNTY, ALABAMA.

APRIL 2, 1868.

It is not wonderful that our "potent, grave and reverend seigniors," in their care about the "balance of power," should have shorn her of some of her locks, one on the east and another on the west, for here there is a large surface, covered with an industrious, intelligent, prosperous and cordially hospitable people, having an abundance to eat, and a fine prospect for the present year.

I said that the county is densely populated. So it is; so much so that I numbered 2,477 families in thirty days, white and colored, but only a part of the latter, on account of their unsettled condition.

There are forty-eight churches—twenty-eight "immersionists" and the remainder pedobaptists, so called; in short, our Baptist brethren are in possession of the county, at least in numbers, superior soil, and the larger congregations who attend these churches. Some of the neighborhoods have as many as eighty white families within two and a half miles of the church.

Then there are the preachers. Talking of preachers, if you are ever at the "point to die," and nothing else will save you but the best batter cakes in the world, happy for you, Mr. Editor, to be near good Brother D——ing; not that he makes them, or a freedwoman, but some one better than either. But the preachers—well, God bless them—of all denominations were kind and very helping to me. Sorry that they have so hard a time to live. I could desire to name many of them, but must not be personal. I am a better man in heart, and far more cheerful, from the evidences of kindness, brotherly love and Christian communion I have enjoyed among the people and preachers in good old Pike.

Bitter sectarianism is hiding its sour, vinegar face—to the glory of God and the comfort of all good men. I found one preacher, in the southeast corner of the county, not of my "persuasion"—Brother A., to whom my heart feels strongly drawn. Well, may be we shall live together in another and better world.

Although I am unable to collect much money, and good Brother Richardson, our Bible agent, is surprised at it, yet I cost the society but little, because the people in the country have it not, but largely contribute to the good cause by feeding me and my horse, and thus helping on the Bible cause. May the Author of that holy book help and bless them evermore. Amen.

JOTTINGS FROM JEFFERSON COUNTY, MISS.

HIGHLANDS, April 14, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: A member of the Mississippi Conference, over his initials, writing from Fayette, the county seat of Jefferson, gives a sad statement of his condition, which I hope, by this time, is considerably relieved.

I reside about sixteen miles from Fayette, and have known the place and, indeed, the entire county for many years. I, too, am a member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, and believe, as I ever have believed, that even in these times, when a preacher does faithfully his entire work in and out of the pulpit, God, who takes care of the ravens, will not suffer him or his to starve or go naked.—Even should the latter sad condition be his, "it is all for the best;" and allow me to state that, when a member of the Louisiana Conference, I was appointed to Mount Lebanon. Had I gone with my afflicted family, my house and entire contents would not have been consumed by the devouring element.

But revolutions will come. By the reference made to faithful Ingram, preachers, I mean no reflection on the brother of Fayette, for I know not his habits or habitudes. I write and speak experimentally on this point. You know how the entire country has suffered in sufferings and the prospect ahead. Still we should thank our Father for everything he sends, and not blame others unless they should be at fault. The loss of my property I regard as "for the best." My own family and personal afflictions I regard in the same light.

Some days this year I could not divine whence provisions would come from on the next. But, thank God, the next came, and I and mine were not and are not in a famishing condition.

I tried the practice of physic soon after coming here, two years since, but found that collections could not be made, and I had to neglect clerical duties, which latter I deem imperative, for "woe" is pronounced against me if I "preach not the gospel."

Although a member of the Mississippi Conference, my appointments every Sabbath are in Tensas parish, Louisiana; and, inasmuch as the congregations do not or cannot support me, I am obliged to labor with my own hands, and walk to my appointments, the one six and the other sixteen miles from home. I thank God that I am able to attend punctually and promptly to my duties. My health, physical, mental and spiritual, never was better.

A night or two since, while away from home at my appointment, some thief or thieves broke into our store-room and removed all the meat and an eighth barrel of flour, which Brother H. kindly sent from New Orleans. My wife fired a gun, and thought she had injured the thief, but no blood or sign was found. However, she made a fine shot. This loss, too, I regard as "all for the best."

The prospect for crops with us is good. In Tensas parish the cut-worms have commenced operations on the corn. A spiritual dearth appears in this region. In Rodney neither the Presbyterians, Baptists nor Methodists could or would support their ministers.—The former have left. The latter, after finding that he was doing no good among the negroes to whom he preached, after he could not get a congregation of white Methodists, accepted a "call" from Louisiana.

The Romanists are erecting an edifice in Rodney.

May God awaken the people!

WHEN the College of Cardinals in Rome meets, the ceremonial requires that each cardinal must arrive with a suite of three carriages. But Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte comes with four carriages, he being a prince. It is evident that great changes have occurred since the apostolic times. The cardinal is a son of Lucien, Prince of Cassino, and a naturalized, if not a native-born, Roman. On receiving the red hat he promised that "he would endeavor to show himself more and more devoted to the church, and to the welfare of souls, so that his hat might, when placed upon his tomb, cover the remains of one of the elect."

HERODOTUS and Bruce are the two travelers whose stories have been condemned as fabulous, but whose trustworthiness is being constantly proved. Three English officers saw, not long since, in Abyssinia, an operation which was described by Bruce, but which has been denied by all subsequent travelers and by the Abyssinians themselves. This was the operation of cutting a steak from the body of a living ox. The writer gives a sickening account of the alleged cruelty, adding that half an hour after the animal was walking about and feeding quietly.

THE Upper House of the Austrian Reichsrath has passed the bill by which the schools will be rescued from the clutch of the priests. Cardinal Rauscher and his friends appear to have altogether withdrawn from the assembly, as only nineteen votes were given against the bill. The measure will be welcomed by the people as even a greater boon than the civil marriage bill.

LETTER FROM WEST FLORIDA.

HUNTING SHEEP.—FEARS.—WORK FOR A SPINNING.—SPURGEON'S DEFENDER.—BASCOM.

MILTON, April 22, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Having been ordered by Bishop Wightman, at the last session of our Conference, to 'take up my bed and walk' to the coastward, there to engage in the sheep hunting business, I did as he bade me, and on Thursday, the 9th inst., I set my face toward the wilderness, intending to take up such of our flock as had not forgotten the voice of their shepherd.

But, sir, I must confess to some misgivings as I went. Think of being sent out to hunt up sheep, the mark upon which you can tell only after having sheared off some of the 'fleece,' and they all in among wolves that are clad in sheep skins, and you will be thinking about as I was on the occasion alluded to. You are constantly asking yourself which are the sheep. How can I tell?' They are covered with the same skin, they walk alike, they eat alike, they bleat alike, they lie down alike and rise up alike. Which are the sheep? Alas! who can tell?

Shall I call this pity or shame? Shame, certainly. It is true, being a member of the church does not increase the responsibility of any person, nor does it place him under any greater obligations to be a Christian or refrain from wickedness than he is under because of his existence; but in the church a man has help to God-service, while out of it he has none. 'This world is no friend to grace,' but an enemy. Hence the greater shame for such church members as 'have not the knowledge of God.'

A member of the church, with all its advantages—its prayer, its sacraments, its social and religious meetings—walking like a worldling! Stingy, profane, unclean!—What a shame! Those who are not members of the church generally 'eat, not giving thanks,' and as they profess to be under nature, and not grace, we expect it, because we know a carnal mind 'is at enmity with God.' But church members generally profess to be under grace, and in grace, and hence we look for compliance with all the terms of the gospel. Hence if you stop for the night with 'a sinner,' and you have to ask permission to conduct family worship, you are not so much surprised as when this is the case at the house of a brother (in Christ?) Again, if you pass a bar-room you expect to hear nothing said reverently of God; but if you pass a church you do. If therefore, when at church, nothing is spoken of God, truly, reverently, you confess yourself somewhat surprised, because it is customary for men, at church and elsewhere, who are members of the church to talk religion, eat with a religious spirit, to lie down and rise up with it as the 'rule of practice.' Had this been the case my misgivings on entering the ministry would not have been so great.

So it is, however, and so, perhaps, it will continue to be till the end of the world. 'Tares and wheat together grow.'

But to return. I went out from town twelve miles by stage, and then laid over one and a half hours, waiting for the arrival of the promised horse. While here a lad of some nine or ten summers, as I supposed, came out to me, when the following conversation occurred:

'Buddie,' I asked, 'have you any schools in this section?'

'Ooch,' replied he.

'Any meeting houses to go to on Sunday?'

'Ooch.'

'No preachers living about these parts?'

'Ooch.'

'Did you ever see a preacher?'

'Ooch.'

'What does a preacher look like?'

'I d'no,' he replied, with the usual shake of the head.

'Now look at me,' said I, assuming the most natural position I could, 'and see how a preacher looks.' My little orator was overcome with surprise to find himself in the presence of the first great man of earth—a preacher.

But this place was not the part of the woods that I started for. No, sir, that is twelve miles beyond this point, and by the circumstances of the journey rather fearful—creeks and boggy swamps; but not being disposed to cross a creek before I reach it, I was wondering and philosophizing upon the resources of wealth and wisdom here in these barren piney woods. My guide was just before me—not in the road, for there was no road there—when suddenly he turned in his saddle and informed me that the creek was about one mile distant, and that on the other side we might possibly encounter a drove of wild asses!—'wild when they see you but fat, but furious when you are on his back.' Such an idea was anything but pleasant. No repeater—not so much as Peter had—no sword; but even a large stick, nor any chance to get one just then.

But, as is usual with such fears, they soon vanished, without the contemplated trouble.

Having reached the point for which I started, I soon found a field 'ripe to the harvest,' affording work for more than one hand, or two—a grand, glorious work: a work for Christ.

Get the map of West Florida and Alabama. Now look there at Choctawhatchie river, coming down from the north. One hundred and ten miles from its mouth Pea river comes in from the northwest. Here now, to the left, is the Alabama and Florida railroad, just west of Conecub river, which river we take for our western boundary. Strike a line from Genoa, in Coppee county, to Audalusia, in Covington county, thence west to Conecub river, and follow said river to Pensacola, and you have bounded the field to which I refer, and in the whole bounds of which there are but five preachers, of 'all shapes, sizes and colors,' belonging to our church, and four of them in the same corner of the field.

Now what is to be done with this piece of ground? Simply one of two things: we are to have a mission district here, or give up the struggle for this country. I would suggest that, while you are crying over the sins of China, and Bishop Early is wanting to send more men 'across the water,' you examine into the relations of the inhabitants of this territory, and see whether they are 'those of your own household' any more than the Chinese are. I fear our 'zeal' on this foreign missionary question is 'not according to knowledge.' There is no more at stake in the great city of Shanghai than there is in Pensacola, and the sooner our own people believe it the better it will be for them.

This work is now fairly begun, and it is to be hoped will be carried on successfully. I organized a church about twenty miles above Pensacola, on the Escambia river, (and fully ten miles from any other church,) and we start with thirteen members. There were young ladies at my appointment who, in company with their little brothers, walked six, and some eight, miles to hear a sermon, and went off crying because I could not leave a regular appointment.

From here I went to Pollard, where I received two members, and turned over my charge there to Brother Graham, who now has charge of the Pollard church by appointment of his presiding elder, Rev. A. West. This last place is an inviting point.

On my return home I fell in company with an English gentleman and lady, whose qualities I found very social, and soon we were chatting away like friends. Spurgeon was mentioned in connection with Beecher. I asked which he most admired as a pulpit speaker, to which he was reluctant to reply. I apologized to him, and excused his partiality for the Englishman, when he began to compare the two men. 'Spurgeon is nice, refined; Beecher is rough, vulgar.' But to this the lady objected, and said she thought 'Dr. Beecher Spurgeon's superior in learning generally, and oratory specially.'

Spurgeon's ambition for public life did, evidently, cause him to leave the study too soon, in order to take the stage. His education is consequently incomplete, and ever will be. But still, giving him forty years' experience, when he will be about Dr. B's age, even the lady agreed that he would outstrip the American political ecclesiastic very greatly. But Bascom was a stronger man than both of them. 'This we yield reluctantly, but truth demands it.'

Respectfully, J. A. PARKER.

THE PRELATICAL CONTROVERSY.

This controversy is fairly reopened in the Protestant Episcopal church by the increasing tendency to ritualism of the High Church party, and the necessary hostility of the evangelical portion of the clergy to prelatical assumptions. The war is opened in New York between the Tyng party, among whom are some eminent ministers and many leading laymen on the one side, and Bishop Potter and the ritualist high churchmen on the other. From that centre it is spreading into neighboring dioceses. We told a week or two since of the correspondence between the Rev. J. P. Hubbard and his diocesan, Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island. We see more recently that in Massachusetts Bishop Eastburne appears on the low church side.—Not long since he preached in the "Old South Church," Congregational, Boston, without "gown" or "bands," and offered an extemporaneous prayer for all ministers of the gospel and the congregations committed to their charge. The Rev. Dr. Nicholson, another Boston rector, has also preached several times in Dr. Nehemiah Adams' pulpit, the two ministers jointly conducting the services. On a recent Sunday evening the Rev. S. H. Tyng, Jr., so recently reprimanded by Bishop Potter, preached in a Baptist church to a congregation of more than 2,000 persons, while many more were unable to obtain admittance.

We presume that the excellent Bishop Davis, of South Carolina, would fully sympathize with the party that wishes to hold back his church from ritualism; for, if we have been correctly informed, he was so displeased with the "intoning" and other innovations which he learned were to be introduced, at the recent consecration of Bishop Beckwith, in Savannah, that after an ineffectual protest he left the city and returned to his own diocese before the day of ordination. This may or may not be true; at any rate, he was not present, although previously in the city.

But these are not the only opponents of prelatical pretensions. The Nashville Advocate reviews two sermons recently preached by the Rev. William J. Ellis, Christ (P. E.) church in Nashville, Tennessee. The subjects of these sermons are: "The Protestant Episcopal church not exclusive, and her ministers not priests;" "The sacrament of the Lord's Supper not a sacrifice." Dr. Summers says of the sermons:

These are noble outbursts against the popery which is intrenching itself within the pales of the Protestant Episcopal church. The author is an able and a devoted minister of that communion—a man of a truly Catholic spirit, and who deserves the thanks of all true Protestants for his manly utterances against the Romanizing operations of so many of his brethren. We hope he will have grace to go forward in this great undertaking, despite the maledictions of Puseyites and the caveats of weak-kneed Protestants who are afraid to offend the arrogant lords of God's heritage, who assume to exercise dominion over their faith. The sermon on the Lord's Supper is an enunciation of the doctrine of the Reformers and of all sound Protestants on this subject, in opposition to the popish dogma of the real presence which is now inculcated by so many "Anglo-Catholic" divines. The sermon on the non-exclusiveness of the P. E. church is a tremendous bombshell cast into the camp of the Romanizers. We quote a few of the opening paragraphs:

"Let us see what doctrine our church holds in regard to non-Episcopal churches and non-episcopally ordained ministers.

"First: I invite your attention to the language of the preface to our prayer-book: 'When in the course of Divine Providence these American States became independent with respect to civil government, their ecclesiastical independence was necessarily included; and the different religious denominations of Christians in these States were left at full and equal liberty to model and organize their respective churches, and forms of worship, and discipline, in such manner as they might judge most convenient.' Here the prayer-book speaks of the respective churches of other religious denominations, and it were hardly charitable in us to suppose that the venerable men who adopted such language believed in their hearts that the Presbyterian and Methodist organizations were not churches. They probably meant not to teach heresy and schism, but the truth, when they use the term churches, of these bodies.

"But let us look at the articles. They are carefully prepared statements—every word in them is pondered over before it is put in—they are the formal scientific expression of the doctrines of the church. The 19th article says: 'The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in whom the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments be duly ministered, according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same.' Do they mean to teach, or do they mean it to be believed, that episcopacy is an essential feature of a church? They state expressly—it is the very object of the definition to state—which are the essential parts of a visible church—faithful men, men of Christian faith, a ministry and sacraments. Where these are, there is a church. But if it be said that this article justifies the notion that, in order that the pure word of God shall be preached, and the sacraments duly ministered, episcopal ordination shall have been received by the officiating person, I reply that if this be so, then, never since the world began, did men more completely stultify themselves than did the framers of this article. The same article, almost the same words, had been used by the Lutherans to express their convictions as to what was a church. They take this Lutheran article, amplifying it a little, putting in a few more words, but carefully omitting to put in the three words to express what some say is an essential feature of a church. They take it from the confession of a religious body which did not have episcopacy! They take its article as a full definition, although an essential feature—episcopacy—is left out! Not only so, but non-Episcopal persons assist in framing the articles, and approve them! Not only so, but the Reformers commune with these non-Episcopal divines and admit them to the cure of Episcopal churches, and Hooper, one of the Reformers, expressly says: 'The church of God is not, by God's word, taken for the multitude or company of men, as bishops, priests, and such other, but that it is the company of all men hearing God's word and obeying unto the same; lest any man should be seduced, believing himself to be bound unto any ordinary succession of bishops and priests, but only unto the word of God and the right use of his sacraments.' And yet, in the face of all this, some say that this article consists with the dogma that episcopacy is necessary to the being of a church."—Southern Christian Advocate.

TWENTY FIVE different societies which have their agents in India support upward of 550 missionaries, and, in connection with the Bible and Tract Societies, expend annually about a million and a half of dollars on that field. The British government expends there annually over three and a half million dollars in secular education. There are in British India, including Burmah and Ceylon, 1,550 native churches and 214,000 native converts, with probably 100,000 boys and girls receiving instruction.

A DISCOVERY IN MAGNETISM.—M. Gerard has discovered a very curious fact. If a metallic ring made of wire, the diameter of which varies regularly, so that at one side of the ring it is very thin and at the other side relatively very thick, be suspended over an electro-magnet, it will begin to revolve. The author sees in this fact the germs of a new system of electric telegraphy, for the details of which we wait.—American Artisan.

A PETITION was presented on the last Sabbath in March for signatures in every Roman Catholic church in Ireland for the total disestablishment of the Protestant church in that island. It is computed that not less than 10,000 names were affixed to it in Dublin and vicinity on that day.

Technical Education a National Want.

BY J. SCOTT RUSSELL, F. R. S.

Technical education is for the English people almost a new question: education of any kind can hardly be called their forte. When we call the Germans a nation of schoolmasters, the epithet is neither given or felt as praise; and if we were to choose whether we would be called a nation of shop-keepers or of pedagogues, we should probably fling the old epithet. Indeed, it is one of our theories that knowledge is a commodity, which like others must take its chance in the market; that those who want it may buy it, and those who don't or can't may go without; that learning of a high quality will fetch its own price in the market, and that education of a low quality will be sold cheap; that shops for schooling may be opened by any one that chooses to pay rent and advertise; and that children may be sent to whatever school offers the best bargain. Accordingly, schooling with us is a trade, but not necessarily a skilled trade, for it neither requires as qualification an apprenticeship, nor has it a trades union to protect its privileges: the columns of our newspapers contain the attractive placards of rival schools underselling each other; and bed, board, washing and schooling at £14 a year is surely as good a bargain as can be had in any country in the world. Those, therefore, who say that education in England is either scarce or dear, have only to go to their daily papers, and satisfy themselves that the English, in this as in some other commodities, are a nation of successful shop-keepers.

But the question is now forcing itself home upon us in several intelligible ways: "What is to be done with those who don't want the article, and won't come and buy? Shall they be made to do so?" Certainly not; that is compulsion, and compulsion is the enemy of free-trade, and free-trade is the fundamental principle of our nation of shop-keepers. To this national logic there is a short direct answer: "Your dogma is a fallacy: knowledge is not a commodity; it is not to be had for the buying, its quality is not determined by its cost, nor its cost by its quality; scarcity does not raise its price, abundance does not lower it. Education obeys few of the laws of shop; the man who has much wants more, the man who has little cares for it less, and he who has none will take no trouble to get it; the boy who has no learning has to be driven to school, and the man who has none refuses to cross its threshold."

The political economy of shop is therefore a blunder; when applied to education it is a blunder and leads to crime. Knowledge is a high gift, most valued by those who have it in largest quantity; it is also a gift which only those who possess can bestow on others—in other words, only the educated can instruct the uneducated. But the possession of this high privilege carries with it responsibility and duty: it is the duty of those who know to communicate their knowledge to their fellow-men.

This is the modern doctrine of the responsibility of knowledge. In olden times the practice and the theory were the contrary of this. It was considered the duty of those who knew to keep the secret: the learned excluded the vulgar by hiding their knowledge in ancient tongues; crafts hoarded secrets under extreme penalties; even medicine and religion were sedulously veiled in mystery.

The truth that it is the duty of the knowing to instruct the unknowing is becoming tardily recognized even in this country. The past year seems likely to form an era both in the theory of government and the practice of education; it is beginning to be felt vaguely, rather as an apprehension than a conviction, that a government may have some sort of moral if not political responsibility for the intellectual and technical condition in which it keeps the people it governs, or in which it leaves them when it ceases to govern.—Hitherto the question for a ministry on its trial has been—"What is the state of accounts of exports and imports? Has the nation under your guidance bought and sold more than under the opposition? Are the funds higher or lower than when you took office, and do you leave the turn of trade for or against us?" For the future it seems as if new questions would be asked:—"Do you leave the English people a happier, wiser, more skilled, more refined, and more contented people than you found them when you took office? Has the social condition of the various classes become more equal under your administration, or are the extremes of luxury and misery as wide as before?" These are awkward and uncomfortable questions; but they seem likely to be the questions of the future, if we may judge from what has been passing round us in 1867.

Many causes, political and other, have served to raise these questions in public interest; but mainly the Universal Exhibition at Paris has served to give them definite form and expression. Among some faults and shortcomings, that Exhibition had one transcendent merit: for the first time a Universal Exhibition was complete and symmetric; whatever faults were found with the building, none could be found with the plan and organization of the interior and its contents. The industries of all had equal prominence, and those of each branch were placed side by side under conditions most favorable for comparison; the leading idea once obtained, no thoughtful observer bent on any course of inquiry could fail to make his comparison easily. Perhaps the very absence of attractiveness or beauty in the building itself gave it this advantage, that without distraction of any sort the visitor could devote his whole time to the study of its contents; those contents were also on this occasion more truly symmetrically representative of each nation, for they were the result of the organization and training for previous Exhibitions, whereas the early Exhibitions had to depend on the fitful labor of unorganized individual industry.

Extraordinary pains have moreover been taken, on this occasion, to gather the lesson and moral of the Exhibition for the benefit of the British people. A new organization was provided, of which we can scarcely imagine the full value to have been apprehended at the time it was initiated. There were of course the usual reports of the jurors, and the prizes which followed their awards; but awards and medals became so profusely showered that their number nearly neutralized their value. Besides, and we may say above and beyond, the jurors, was a higher series of reports prepared by special commissioners sent to report on the result of the Exhibition with reference to national interests; and a large number of their reports have already been printed, and will speedily appear in the forthcoming Kensington Blue Book. A second series of reports, of a still more strictly technical nature, was elicited by the commissioners of schools, who had ascertained that many of the reports on the French Exhibition appeared to throw the blame of certain cases of inferiority on the lower technical education of the British people, and the commission issued a series of inquiries of which they then published the report. On this report the government having taken alarm, sent abroad a commissioner, if not officially at least officiosement, to ascertain by personal inquiry whether the alleged defects of our systems of education and our inferiority to some other countries in some sorts of technical skill were real or imaginary; and we have in the report of Mr. Samuelson, to the vice president of the Council of Education, the views of a practical manufacturer concerning the previous statements. All these sources of information agree on three points—on the great practical value of education to a people; on the admirable organization provided by the governments of other countries for giving to their people systematic and universally diffused technical education; and thirdly, on the deplorable neglect of such measures which has characterized our own government and people.

But in our estimation there is a collection of documents of far more importance than all these put together, which has just been published in an unassuming form by the Society of Arts, and issued from their rooms in the Adelphi, at the small price of half a crown. We doubt whether the society itself clearly saw what it was about when it undertook the harmless, beneficent duty of offering to pay the traveling expenses of such English artisans as wanted to study their own departments of trade in the French Exhibition, and could not afford the cost; and when in return for this benefit it imposed the modest condition that they should report in writing on what they had seen and learnt. Out of this simple act has grown a collection of reports, 689 pages of closely printed matter, full of subject for the gravest thought; treating, in fact, the whole question of the social condition, moral and religious educations of the workman, and of the duties which various governments have either neglected or performed, in giving or withholding from the youth of a nation that intelligence, skill and taste which they unanimously declare education can promote and develop if it cannot create. It is the quiet, reasonable, practical and moderate tone in which all this has been investigated and set down, which renders this volume the notable contribution to Social Science in 1867.

Of all these four separate sources of knowledge, we should wish to convey to our readers the aim, the substance, and the conclusions.—We fear we shall not be able in one article to overtake all of them, for the field is both wide and prolific, covering nearly all the branches of human industry.

I. Taking up the first "Report relative to Technical Education by the Schools' Inquiry Commission of 2d July, 1867," we find the commissioners issuing a request for information to some eminent jurors and others, as to the truth of certain "evidence considered to be afforded by the International Exhibition at Paris, of the inferior rate of progress in manufacturing and mechanical industry in England compared with that made in other European countries;" and they add, "it has been stated to us that this alleged inferiority is due in a great measure to the want of technical education, and we have therefore thought it desirable to ascertain from many eminent English jurors in this department whether they agree with this opinion; and we think it expedient at once to report to your majesty the answer which we have received to our inquiry on this point."

The gentlemen whom they consulted, and whose answers they have printed, were: Dr. Lyon Playfair, F.R.S.; Professor Tyndall, F.R.S.; Dr. David S. Price; J. E. McConnell, C.E.; James Young, chemical manufacturer; J. Scott Russell, F.R.S.; Captain Beaumont, R.E.; Robert Mallet, C.E.; Rev. Canon Norris, M.A.; Professor Frankland, F.R.S.; John Fowler, C.E.; Warrington W. Smyth, F.R.S.; E. Hull; Peter Graham; A. J. Mundella, and W. Spotten; thus representing many of the most important departments of our educated professions, our applied sciences, engineering education and manufacturers. We shall content ourselves with giving the essence of these opinions.

Dr. Lyon Playfair gives as the result of his own inquiry as a juror, and of those of other jurors, "A singular accordance of opinion prevailed that our country had shown little inventiveness and made little progress in the peaceful arts of industry since 1862. Out of ninety classes there are scarcely a dozen in which a pre eminence is unhesitatingly awarded to us. The one cause upon which there was most unanimity of conviction is that France, Prussia, Austria, Belgium and Switzerland possess good systems of industrial education for the masters and managers of manufactories and workshops, and that England possesses none."

Professor Tyndall says: "I have long entertained the opinion that, in virtue of the better education provided by continental nations, England must one day, and that no distant one, find herself outstripped by those nations, both in the arts of peace and war."

Mr. Huth writes: "I am sorry to say that, although we may still be unsurpassed in any of our productions, we no longer hold that pre-eminence which was accorded to us in 1851. The enormous strides that have of late been made by our continental rivals in France, Belgium, Prussia and Austria will make it daily more difficult for our woolen manufacturers to hold not only their former prominent position, but even to maintain their present one. I found that it is the want of industrial education in this country which prevents our manufactures from making that progress which other nations are making. I found both masters and foremen of other countries much more scientifically educated than our own. The workmen of other countries have a far superior education to ours, many of whom have none whatever. Their productions show clearly that there is not a machine working a machine, but that brains sit at the loom, and intelligence stands at the spinning-wheel."

Mr. McConnell says: "In the class for which I was juror for England I made a very careful examination and comparison of our locomotive engines, carriages, railway machinery, apparatus and materials with those exhibited by France, Germany and Belgium. I am firmly convinced that our former superiority, either in material or workmanship, no longer exists.—Unless we adopt a system of technical education for our workmen in this country we shall soon not even hold our own in cheapness. It appears to me government should take the matter in hand. There should be mining schools in South Wales, Staffordshire and Durham; and machinery and engine schools in Manchester, Glasgow, etc."

Professor Frankland says: "As a juror in Class XLIV. of the Paris Exhibition, I was not only forcibly struck by the want of evidence of progress in the different branches of chemical manufactures carried on in Great Britain, but still more so by great advances made by other nations, especially Germany, France and Switzerland, in respect of such manufactures, since 1862, when, as a juror in the corresponding class, I had also an opportunity of comparing the chemical manufactures of different nations. In the polytechnic schools of Germany and Switzerland the future manufacturer or manager is made familiar with those laws and applications of the great natural forces which must always form the basis of every intelligent and progressive industry. It seems that at length this superiority in previous training is more than counterbalancing the undoubted advantages which this country possesses in raw material.—Macmillan's Magazine.

BUDHISM.

BY REV. W. G. E. CUNNINGHAM, LATE MISSIONARY TO CHINA.

BUDH.

Budh is a name for God, not any particular god, but the name given to the idea of a god. It does not represent, in the mind of a Budhist, a living, self-existent, Almighty Being, who created; and by his power upholds all things, but simply the idea of abstract godship. Budhist writers deny personality to what is properly called Budh, yet use it to designate the person in whom this abstract godship is incarnate. They say it is independent of all living, existence, or government. It is something, or nothing, as the mind conceives it to be, or not to be. It is, and it is not, and yet it has been, without beginning, and must forever be.

The manifestations of this idea among men are called avatars, of which the Brahmans and Budhists enumerate ten, as follows: 1 Matsya, the fish, or man-fish; 2. Kurma, the tortoise, or man-tortoise; 3. Varaha, the boar, or man-boar; 4. Narasingha, the lion, or man-lion; 5. Vamana, or dwarf; 6. Parasu Roma, the name of the person in whom Vishnu, or the idea, became incarnate; 7. Sre Ram, the same; 8. Krishna, the same; 9. Budh; 10. Kalki. Here we find the origin of the word Budh; it is the name of the ninth person, in whom this manifestation of godship appeared. One more is to appear, and then the end of all things. The name of Budh is made thus to serve a double purpose: first, as the name of the last person in whom the idea was manifested; and secondly, as a name for the idea itself.

The last Budh was born son of a king in Hindostan, about the year 626, B. C. He had previously lived in 400,000,000 worlds, and passed through many transmigrations in each! In this world he had passed through every grade of being, from an insect to a man, before attaining to the honors of Budh. In this last state his memory was so quickened that he remembered distinctly all the incidents of his many transmigrations. Five hundred and fifty of the marvellous stories told by him concerning his ups and downs in in the world as a deer, a monkey, an elephant, a fowl, etc., have been preserved for the edification of believers. After eighty years of human life, forty-five of which had been spent as a religious teacher, he entered nieban, or annihilation, never to reappear again from its oblivious depths. The next Budh will appear about eight thousand years from this time. He will be eighty cubits high, his month five cubits wide, and the hair of his eyebrows five cubits long. The teachings of this ninth avatar, or Budh, are called

THE DOCTRINES OF BUDHISM.

Of one supreme, self-existent and eternal Being, Budhism does not contain one intimation. It is a system of metaphysical atheism. From the death of one Budh to the appearance of another there is no god. Intervening generations must worship his image, and perform the prescribed rites. At this time Budh is but a memory—a myth of past ages—without power to bless or curse. The leading tenets of the system may be summed up as follows:

1. The eternal existence of the universe, and the various orders of beings which inhabit it.

2. The transmigration of souls through a purgatorial series, to fit them for the blessedness of nieban.

3. Annihilation, or a return to the elementary condition of all organic existences. Our word annihilation does not, I think, correctly represent nieban. It is not exactly absorption, or utter destruction of essence, but the return to that state in which all things are eternal. It is spiritual dissolution, in which the soul, separated into its elementary principles, resumes its original state of rest.

4. The appearance at distant periods of beings who have completed their purification, and, as a consequence, enter the elevated regions of divinity, or become Budh, and then disappear forever.

5. Merit, which is divided into positive and negative, or the merit of doing, and the merit of not doing. The law, covering all the schedule, is comprehended in five commandments: 1. Thou shalt not kill. 2. Thou shalt not steal. 3. Thou shalt not commit adultery. 4. Thou shalt not lie. 5. Thou shalt drink no intoxicating liquors. The offences, under these commandments, are catalogued at great length in Budhist works, on merit and demerit. The following may serve as an example: 1. Sins of the body, such as killing, beating, bruising, breaking, etc. 2. Those of the tongue, such as lying, slandering, backbiting, talebearing, cursing, abusing, etc. 3. Those of the mind, such as pride, envy, covetousness, hatred, jealousy, anger, etc.

Works of merit are also detailed with great minuteness in their manuals and tracts, such as: 1. Punctuality in keeping all the precepts of Budh. 2. Liberality in making offerings to the temples, shrines, priests, etc. 3. Repeating prayers, reading good books, tracts and whatever tends to improve or purify the mind. All good Budhists repeat the sacred name every time they receive a present, perform an act of piety, or experience any sudden emotion.

The transmigration of souls is the great article in all the creeds of Asia. It is not peculiar to Budhism, Touism, Brahmanism or Confucianism, but common to all these and the minor systems of heathen superstition. One Budhist writer says: "If all the tears shed by the most fortunate soul of sorrowing man, in its countless wanderings and changes through the universe, ere it reaches the last turn in its weary journey to the shoreless ocean of nieban, were collected, the sea would be but a drop in comparison." "Man was made to mourn," is the universal language of heathenism, and he mourns without the consolation of hope. Hence, to finish the eternal round of weary change, and drop into the oblivions repose of nieban, is a consummation devoutly sought. The Budhist longs for this eternal rest, as the toil-worn laborer for the refreshing shades and tranquil slumbers of the night. Beyond this starless night he hopes for no to-morrow. How inexpressibly sad the condition of the heathen world!

Those who teach in our Sabbath schools should frequently call the attention of the children, and the youth committed to their instruction, to the wretched condition of those who have no knowledge of Christianity. Budhism is one of the best systems of heathen religion in the world. It has been called "the Christianity of the east." This is foolish, but it shows that men esteem it the best form of heathen error. But, alas, what miserable nonsense it is! Let us thank God for the Bible.

Budhist temples, worship, priesthood, etc., must be reserved for a future number.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Recent Scientific Discoveries.

A NEW MODE OF ORNAMENTING PAPER.—Puscher gives a simple process for ornamenting paper with silky crystals, an improvement on the method we published last year, in which sugar of lead was employed. He now recommends sulphate of magnesia to be used. He dissolves six parts by weight of Epsom salts and six parts of British gum in six parts of water, adds a small quantity of glycerine, and boils the liquid for a moment. He then strains the solution and allows it to cool a little. Before it is quite cold he spreads it with a camel's-hair brush upon paper previously done over with a thin solution of glue or gelatine. As the paper so prepared dries it becomes covered with a beautiful crystaline surface. The crystals are long or small according to the strength of the solutions and rapidity with which the paper is dried. To obtain variegated crystals, the solution may be colored with various aniline colors, and the paper must be prepared with a mixture of equal parts of white of egg and water instead of the gelatine solution. Paper so ornamented, it is said, may be glazed by passing it between rollers or putting it under a press. In consequence of the presence of the glycerine the paper does not completely dry, and may be printed upon by the lithographic process without being moistened. The process is recommended for ornamenting envelopes, dinner, pattern, and visiting cards, and also playing cards. One perhaps useful application remains to be noticed. A solution prepared with one-third the quantity of gum before mentioned, and with no glycerine, may be applied to a lithographic stone, and a copy of the crystallization obtained may be transferred to another stone by the usual lithographic process. A transfer may be made from this to three or four other working stones, from which many thousands of impressions of the crystals may be taken. The author recommends the impressions from these stones on yellow paper as a background for banknotes, for as no two exactly similar crystallizations are likely to be obtained it will be impossible to commit a forgery. The yellow paper is, of course, recommended to prevent a copy being made by photography.

A PROCESS FOR SILVERING HOOKS AND EYES MADE OF IRON WIRE.—A process for silvering hooks and eyes made of iron wire has been patented in Bavaria by Toderer. Such hooks and eyes are first suspended by means of zinc in a copper vessel containing dilute sulphuric acid until the iron shows a clean bright surface. They are then well rinsed with water, and afterward placed in a bath of a mixed solution of sulphate of zinc, sulphate of copper, and cyanide of potassium. Here they remain until they receive a bright coating of brass. They are lastly transferred to a bath of nitrate of silver, cyanide of potassium, and sulphate of soda, in which they quickly receive a coating of silver. This new manufacture, it is said in Dingler's Journal, answers all requirements. To us it looks complicated and the result improbable, but we give it in case any of our readers should like to try the experiment.

THE PHYSICAL PROPERTIES OF PETROLEUM.—The physical properties and caloritic power of American petroleum have been investigated by M. Henry Deville, who has just communicated his results to the Academy of Sciences. We shall return to the memoir for some useful facts it contains, and now only notice one important point established. M. Deville shows that Pennsylvania petroleum increases in bulk by one-hundredth of its volume for every 10 degrees centigrade of heat. This, the author points out, is a fact to be considered when storing petroleum for fuel in steam vessels, where it will necessarily be exposed to a higher temperature. Space should be left in the casks to allow of this expansion, or they may burst and give rise to an explosion. Another source of danger on board ship—and, as dealers and speculators in the article well know, a cause of great loss—is the power petroleum has of penetrating wood. The loss and the danger, however, may both be obviated by paying over the interior of the casks with a strong solution of glue or albumen. This, when dry, forms a coating impermeable to the oil. There are other solutions used for the same purpose, but nothing, we believe, answers better than glue, although M. Garnier states that he can send petroleum about safely in paper bags, saturated with a preparation of his invention. M. Deville makes the recommendation, quite unnecessarily we think, that the lighter oils should be distilled off when the petroleum is intended for fuel.—American Artisan.

ANECDOTE OF WHITEFIELD.

When Mr. Whitefield was preaching on one occasion, at Plymouth, he lodged with Mr. Kinsman, a minister of the town. After breakfast, on Monday, he said to his friend, "Come, let us visit some of your poor people. It is not enough that we labor in the pulpit; we must endeavor to be useful out of it." On entering the dwellings of the afflicted poor he administered to their temporal as well as spiritual wants. Mr. Kinsman, knowing the low state of his finances, was surprised at his liberality, and suggested that he thought he had been too bountiful. Mr. Whitefield, with some degree of smartness, replied: "It is not enough, young man, to pray, and put on a serious face. True religion, and undefiled, is this—to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and supply their wants. My stock, it is true, is nearly exhausted; but God, whom I serve, and whose saints we have assisted, will, I doubt not, soon give me a supply." His hopes were not disappointed. A stranger called on him in the evening, who addressed him thus: "With great pleasure I have heard you preach; you are on a journey, as well as myself, and traveling is expensive. Do me the honor to accept this," at the same time presenting him with five guineas. Returning to the family, Mr. Whitefield, smiling, held out the money in his hand, saying, "There, young man, God has speedily repaid what I have bestowed. Let this, in future, teach you not to withhold what is in the power of your hand to give. The gentleman to whom I was called is a perfect stanger to me; his only business was to give me the sum you see." It is remarkable that this gentleman, though rich, was notorious for a penurious disposition. But Elijah was fed by the ravens.

The late Rev. Rowland Hill, when a young man, was once on a visit to Mr. Whitefield. The latter was requested to call on a poor woman, who had been so dreadfully burned that she could not survive many hours. He went immediately and prayed with her. He had no sooner left her than she called out, "Oh, where is Mr. Whitefield?" Urged by her entreaty, her friends requested him to visit her a second time. He complied, and again prayed with her. The poor, afflicted woman continued still to desire his presence. When her friends came for him a third time, "I begged of him," said Mr. Hill, "not to go for he could scarcely expect to do any good. Your nerves are too weak, your feelings are too acute to endure such scenes." I shall never forget his mild reproof: "Leave me; my Master can save to the uttermost, to the very uttermost."

From a memorandum book, in which Mr. Whitefield recorded the times and places of his ministerial labors, it appears that from the period of his ordination to that of his death; which was thirty-four years, he preached upwards of eighteen thousand sermons."

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Dr. Harmon, the agent of this society for south Mississippi and east Louisiana, has returned from an extensive tour in this agency. Bible societies were reorganized at Vicksburg, Yazoo City, Canton, Jackson, Newton Station, Amite City, Baton Rouge and other points. Notwithstanding the financial stringency of the present moment, he found the people everywhere generous, and he bears record that "to their power, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing." We bid him God speed in this most noble enterprise.

This society is making a great effort to supply the people with the word of God gratuitously, and in this direction to repair the wastes of war.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

The determination of the extreme Radicals to convict the President can scarcely be increased. They rage for it. The following paragraph from a recent editorial of the Independent, the religious organ of that party, will convey to those of the South who have but little opportunity to read the other side the amount of constitutional element that enters into the Radical estimate of the merits of the case:

LET JUSTICE BE DONE.—The importance of convicting the President is incalculable. His acquittal would be a national calamity. Not to speak of party necessity, (which is an argument we have always disdained to use,) the public safety requires the removal of the public enemy. We do not hesitate to say that the burdens which this nation now suffers from the chief-magistracy of Andrew Johnson are so great and grievous that, if there were no legal, constitutional, and peaceful mode whereby the people could protect themselves against this bold, bad man, they would have not only a plain right to revolution, but just cause to exercise it.

Nothing but the overruling of Him who "leadeth counselors away spoiled" can prevent conviction.

THE POWER OF PREACHING.

The power of the preacher as an instrument of the Holy Spirit is set forth in two of the most striking passages of the Bible. The one is the description of the effect of Peter's words on the day of Pentecost, the other the lofty vision of the prophet Ezekiel when "the hand of the Lord" was upon him, and carried him out and set him down "in the midst of a valley of bones." In this latter instance not only is the number of those who lived greater, but the appearance of hopelessness is greater in the mass of dry bones than it was in moving flesh and blood. For to human sight and thought what is there more hopeless than a rattling human skeleton? A tenantless, decayed house, a broken bridge, or a dead tree, there is some faint notion of repair and renewal that cleaves to these, but a bone, a human bone, a human skull, is the completest story of utter despair.

Yet it is in this field of arid impossibility that the Spirit chooses to work out the demonstration of his power; and here he places the preacher. As the victory of the Son over the Arch-enemy who had the power over death was achieved in the wilderness, so here the Holy Spirit triumphs over death itself in the "open valley"—one of those Arabian wadies, winding among cliffs and crags of granite, unrelieved by bush or tree, such as surround the Sinaitic peaks, and centuries before had swallowed up the unbelieving wandering hosts of Israel. What a field of observation for a mortal preacher! Which ever way the eye ranged the valley was "full of bones"—as if some great battle, as that of the last day, had been fought in Esdraelon!

"He caused me to pass by them round about"—to walk and measure with eye and step their number, their deadness and dryness. Here is a skull with a gash, as if the edge of a battle-axe had cleft it; there they lie in heaps and confusion, as if in the last rally of deadly conflict. Here a hand, and there an arm, as if scattered about by vultures—a bone with the mark of a lion's tooth upon it—and there many broken skulls together, as if some beast had for a time fed only upon the brains of men—bone torn from its bone, articulation broken. O prophet! let this sink into thy soul, all this death and despair, and then answer me, "Can these bones live?" Can they? Let me see—can they? This orbless, empty, chapless skull—it may be of some great captain—which I hold so easily in my hand; can it live? No.—Yes, it might by the power that first made it, but by nothing else. But why ask—what connection of the idea of life is there with these relics? These live? —these echoing crags ever again ring with the voices and shouts of this host!

It is here among the bones of the dead that the Spirit seeks to evoke the faith of the prophet—"Believest thou that I can do this?" To believe with all the difficulties in full view is the true art of faith. Ignorance of them seems often to strengthen faith, but not a great faith, that has all its eyes open, and yet believes; which sees the opposing sea, yet divides it; the hardness of the rock, yet smites it; the yielding wave, yet, boldly steps upon it. When we know the man—his utter deadness to God, his worldliness, his history, his pride, his flesh, his feebleness of virtuous resolve, his antecedents and his surroundings—"can he live?" Common sense says no; human reason says no. He may, but the dry bones of the dead fall as soon. Can this man ever become a pure, spiritually-minded, lowly, loving child of God? The valleys of heathen-land—can these bones live? Africa, the far Indies, O will they ever be inhabited by living men?

"O Lord, thou knowest." "The residue of the Spirit" is with Thee—all things are possible to Thee. Thank God! the preacher has some faith. So much for his AUDIENCE: now for the PROCESS OF INFUSING LIFE. "He said unto me, prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." Yes, by preaching; by what else do the dead ever live? "My words are spirit and they are life." Can these hear? Yes, or else they can not live. O preacher, preach—if thy congregation be as dead as stones, as dry as the bones of the valley; with bold faith, hope and zeal, preach! It is not the first time that a dead man has heard a living voice. Declare the power and the promise of God—"I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live." Preach life—grasp the whole subject—the great salvation—a new heart—say that religion is a new existence—"ye must be born again"—"not of blood," "but of God."—All the elements of life shall be yours, of real life; no mere resemblance, but its muscle, its sinew, its health—ye shall be created in Christ Jesus, and ye shall be in power and function the sons of God! And as you thus preach remember that the Holy Spirit places to your lips his own trump, the very one with which he will wake up the dead at the last day.

"And did they live?"—Aye, verily. —"Thou sendest forth thy spirit and they are created." "So I prophesied as I was commanded, and as I prophesied"—in the very moment—"there was a noise"—as in that "upper room."—"And behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone." The Spirit went with the word, the deep was stirred, the power of God was among the dead. The humanizing process went on—"the sinews and the flesh came up upon them and the skin covered them above." Teachable, humble, ardent in prayer, feeling among the promises—what next? They are in the likeness of the living, yet how far from the life of love. The steps of the process were so many seasons of anxious waiting to the prophet; at every stage infinite power was needed. O preacher, thou must look to thy resources. Call mightily; say: O Divine Spirit, "breathe upon these slain." Send forth the spirit of thy Son, O God!

"And the breath came into them, and they lived and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army." Nothing can surpass the greatness of this motion—the new earth springing into its form and beauty at the voice of the Creator is not so great as this erect and mighty host breathed into being through the preached word, by the power of the Holy Ghost. So, revived by the same spirit, nation after nation shall uprise and march forward to the seat of the Judge. Behold! the valley is full of life! O army of the living God, shout your pæans, erect your trophy, for the last enemy is beneath your feet.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ECCE ECCLESIA.—Publishers, Blelock & Co., New York, 1868. 12mo. For sale by Messrs. Blelock & Co., 130 Canal street, New Orleans. The exclamation of Pilate, "Ecce Homo!" was happily enough seized upon by the writer of a most admirable essay upon the manhood of Christ. What induced the author of this work to give it the title of "Ecce" we cannot imagine. Possibly he thinks that he has set forth the church in some new light. He parades the venerable truth that the Christian church has existed ever since the days of Abel, as if it were a novelty. In a very dogmatic and commonplace style, cut up into short paragraphs to give it an expression of liveliness, he attacks a thousand men of straw and demolishes them all. It would puzzle one to find more self-satisfaction, more ado about nothing, or greater affectation of learning in the same number of pages. Naturalists tell us that a spider can spin only some seven or eight entire webs. Let us hope that this unknown author has written his eighth book.

We have received the following new works from Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

FIVE HUNDRED POUNDS REWARD.—A novel, by a Barrister.

CHARLOTTE'S INHERITANCE, by M. E. Braddon: being Nos. 309 and 311 of the "Library of Select Novels," published by Messrs. Harper & Bros., New York, 1868. Fifty cent edition.

DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL: by Fred W. Krummacher, D. D. Translated by Rev. M. G. Easton, M. A. New York: Harper & Bros., 1868. 12mo. pp. 515.

This is by the author of that delightful meditation, "Elisha, the Tishbite." The venerable court preacher of Berlin, full of honors, influence, learning and piety, finds in the sweet singer of Israel a theme for the fullest display of his enlightened Christian experience. And he has presented us with such a book as the heart of every child of God delights in for its unction and expression.

THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED NETHERLANDS, by John Lothrop Motley, D. C. L. Volume 4th. New York: Harper & Bros., 1868. 8vo., pp. 592.

This volume embraces a period of ten years, from 1599 to 1609, the date of the twelve years' truce, and the beginning of the acknowledged independence of the United Provinces. The great characters, Prince Maurice and Olden Barneveld, are the prominent figures upon the canvass. We need not add that they are drawn with a steady and accurate hand, or that the colors of the skillful artist are both pleasing and brilliant. No writer surpasses Mr. Motley in richness and variety of language, nor in incidness of arrangement. The materials of this history have been derived from the same sources which furnished the substance of his "Rise of the Dutch Republic," and were doubtless collected at the same time. Manuscripts which have long slept, and secret state papers of the kings of Spain, have in these last days been brought out from their hiding places and made to tell the wonderful story of ambition, war, persecution, and of state and church-craft, which made up the forty years' war between the Catholic and Protestant; between the Spanish crown and its Netherland provinces. The statesman—and who is not a statesman in these days—may here see the illustration of that best combination of political forces which, first in the Grecian States, then in that of the cantons of Switzerland, and subsequently in the thirteen Colonies of this country, established and maintained independence against the greatest monarchies of ancient or modern times. That vast change from this political form to an unchecked sea-like democracy, of the pure sans culottes type, which began in the adoption of the present Constitution of the United States, is just now being consummated in this country. And this volume of Mr. Motley's very opportunely brings to our view the value of those political forms, maxims and principles from which we are being separated more and more every day.

BRITISH HONDURAS, by Charles Swett. A pamphlet of 125 pages. New Orleans: George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, publisher. 1868. Mr. Swett is a citizen of Mississippi; has just returned from a trip to British and Spanish Honduras. He went out in company with several gentlemen of intelligence from the Southwest, for the purpose of observing the country and the condition of those colonies of Americans who have settled there. The result of their observation is here given in a fair spirit, and furnishes much valuable information to all who may have any thought of going to Central America. It is on the whole the most accurate and sensible paper we have seen on this fruitful subject.

A TREMENDOUS "sea bore" took place at the island of Guadaloupe March 10. At the harbor of Le Moule it was similar to the one that rushed into St. Thomas last fall, but larger. It lasted for twenty-four hours. The sea receded thirty miles, and left all the ships aground, when the gigantic wave returned, threatening general destruction. A British vessel, deeply laden, was smashed to pieces.

JOHN C. GREEN, of New York, has given the College of New Jersey $120,000, and a deed of valuable real estate.

THE ABSURDITIES OF POPERY.

BY PROF. J. B. A. AUBENS.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

The supporters of this monster doctrine are man-eaters, cannibals, anthropophagi! Yea, they do not only devour the Lord's body; they even feast upon his soul, swallow both, and believingly permit the conversion of the same into gastric juice!

We will, however, not condemn without inquiry. We call for a conference of all Roman priests. Here is pure bread and pure wine from the Rhine. In their presence we shall mix poison with both: enough, indeed, to injure health, though not to kill. Now let the popes nuncio, let the pope himself, appear. Let him, assisted by all the priests, go through the regular incantation and manipulation, perform the whole affair of converting bread and wine into flesh and blood. If bread is now no longer farinaceous, if wine is no longer vinous, the poison, obviously, can likewise be no longer venene. But will these priests now partake of the Lord's Supper, using the stated and prepared elements? They will not! Hence they are not sincere in regard to this absurd doctrine of transubstantiation. Doubtless, upon a brief inquiry, we shall find this doctrine to be what Cardinal Herron, upon his death-bed, found it to be: an overgrown monster.

1. The doctrine of transubstantiation is opposed to every one of the five senses, is at irreconcilable enmity with eyes, hands, palate, nose and ears. These five guides, in relation to external things, must be thrown to Eolus. A poor Hibernian's palate says: the dinner is potatoes. A priest will tell him it is a rich plum pudding. A miserable starveling, employing the five senses, the fallacious five, can find nothing on the table but sorry soupe maigre. The pope can tell him that he is really feasting on a fat sirloin. Admirable casuistry! Beautiful exchange!

"—— Exchange
Is held no robbery."

We deem it right here to assert that, in Luke 24:39, the Lord requires men not to reject the testimony of sense.

2. According to transubstantiation, the consummate piece of foolery, Christ's one body is at once in many places—in a million, ten million!—or he has at once so many bodies! His human nature can be, at one and the same time, on every continent, in every nation, province, country, city or village! Oh, egregious ignorance!

3. At the supper preceding the crucifixion Jesus Christ must have had two bodies—one that was perceptible to the apostles, and the other one he held between his thumb and forefinger! His second body he ate and drank!—that is, he ate and drank himself! Yea, the Saviour, with his own hands, gave himself away to every one of his disciples to be eaten and drank! and yet kept himself to himself! Oh, contemptible absurdity.

4 If the bread and wine be really flesh and blood, the flesh and blood as often many feet or yards apart, one being on a plate, the other in a cup. Indeed the two parts of the live body can be in two rooms, or in two buildings, or even a mile one from the other! The body of Christ can be divided into two parts, solid and fluid; and the solid can be carried to Mobile, while the liquid remains in New Orleans; and yet this body continues alive and well! Well may the seven wonders of the world hide their diminished heads.

5. If this monster doctrine be true, every papal priest, however stupid and ignorant, however covered with crime, guilt and infamy, possesses a kind of carte blanche from God in his pocket to perform miracles, to produce Christ or Christs ad infinitum.

6. We have seen follies physical and metaphysical. We notice now a folly theological. While the human nature of our Lord is doing the wonders mentioned in the foregoing, it is, according to Scriptures, not on earth at all, but really and truly in heaven, at the right hand of God. "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God." (Heb. 10:12.) Can one body, at one and the same time, be in more than one place?

We conclude this article with Luther's account of popery:

"'Tis folly upon folly piled,
Wisdom being thrown away."

IMPORTANT ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS, BUREAU OF REFUGEES FREEDMEN AND ABANDONED LANDS, STATE OF LOUISIANA, NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 22d, 1868.

Circular No. 11.

It having been reported to the Assistant Commissioner of the Bureau, that freedmen, who are laboring on plantations under regular contract, are being discharged by their employers on account of their participation in the existing political contest in this State, all such employers are hereby notified that no action of the sort will be tolerated by this Bureau, and any planter who shall discharge a freedman from his employ for such cause will be held bound by the terms of his contract with such freedman. If the contract is on shares the freedman will be held to be entitled to his share of the proceeds of the crop when sold; if for wages, the freedman will be entitled to receive wages from the date of his discharge, in addition to the amount due him at that date, as provided for by existing State laws.

By order of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan, U. S. A., Assistant Commissioner.

WM. H. STERLING,
Capt. 1st U. S. Infantry, A. A. A. G.

LORD HAILES AND THE NEW TESTAMENT.—"I was dining," said Dr. Buchanan, 'some time ago, with a literary party at old Mr. Abercrombie's, of Trillibody, (the father of Mr. Ralph Abercrombie, who was slain in Egypt,) and we spent the evening together. A gentleman present put a question which puzzled the whole company. It was this: Supposing all the New Testaments in the world had been destroyed at the end of the third century, could their contents have been recovered from the writings of the first three centuries? The question was novel to all, and no one hazarded a guess in answer to the inquiry.

About two months after this meeting I received an invitation to breakfast with Lord Hailes (Sir David Dalrimple) next morning. He had been one of the party.—During breakfast he asked me if I recollected the curious question about the possibility of recovering the contents of the New Testament from the writings of the first three centuries. 'I remember it well, and have thought of it often, without being able to form an opinion or conjecture on the subject.'

'Well,' said Lord Hailes, 'that question quite accorded with the taste of my antiquarian mind. On returning home, as I knew I had all the writers of those centuries, I began immediately to collect them, that I might set to work on the arduous task as soon as possible. Pointing to a table covered with papers, he said: 'There I have been busy these two months, searching for chapters, half chapters, and sentences of the New Testament, and have marked down what I found and where I found it, so that any person may examine and see for himself. I have actually discovered the whole New Testament, except seven or eleven verses, (I forget which,) which satisfies me that I could discover them also. God concealed or hid the treasures of His word, that Julian, the apostate emperor, and other enemies of Christ, who wished to extirpate the gospel from the world, never would have thought of; and though they had, they never could have effected their destruction.'—Haldane's Memoir.

THE LIVINGSTONE SEARCH EXPEDITION.—It is worthy of note that the whole of the party forming the late Livingstone search expedition enjoyed perfect immunity from disease during four months' travel; and it was not until seven days after leaving the Zambesi, on the malarious delta of which the party was encamped from November 11 to December 4, that one man was seized on board the Raccoon with bilious remittent fever of a very severe character. The man, however, recovered. The expedition worked from sunrise to sunset, in boats or walking, our two meals a day, at starting and halting, except a light lunch at midday. A full dose of quinine at night was always taken. It would be well if medical officers abroad would more frequently take the opportunity of forwarding useful information such as the above, having reference to the medical and sanitary features of expeditions in which they may be engaged.—London Lancet.

THE Liberal party in England are holding enthusiastic meetings all over the country, for the purpose of discussing the grievances of Ireland.

BUDHISM—ITS EXTENT.

BY REV. W. G. E. CUNNINGHAM, LATE MISSIONARY TO CHINA.

A FEARFUL SIGHT.

Suppose the worshipers of Budh—those who burn incense before his image, and bend the knee in adoration in his temples, were placed in procession and required to pass in review before the Christian world! We will not include the millions who worship other idols, but only those who have no other or better ground of hope than this monstrous delusion of Satan—the worshipers of this one false god. Behold the vast procession as it begins to move, numbering more than five hundred millions! From China, Japan, Borneo, Sumatra, Cochin-China, Soo Choo, Siam, Hindustan, and the beautiful islands of the East India Archipelago, Ceylon, Singapore, Penang, they come. Take your stand on some lofty elevation, and count their as they pass! At the head of the column appears an enormous wooden image, dressed in rich silks, with costly jewels glittering on his forehead, breast and hands. A million of yellow-robed priests appear as his immediate servants, while more than a million trumpets bray his praise in frightful discord, as millions of censers fill the atmosphere with perfume! Heading westward now, the grand procession moves, begin the task of counting. Night and day, without rest, or food, or sleep, you continue the weary work, yet eleven days have passed before you have counted the first million. Day after day the moving column advances at the rate of thirty miles for every twenty-four hours. Over mountains, over deserts, oceans, seas, rivers, onward in its solemn march the endless column doubles upon itself, then doubles again and again, and again, until it girdles the earth twenty-one times! Days and weeks, and months and years have passed away, and still they come—men, women and children. Fifty years have rolled over since you began the task of counting these devotees of a false religion. The little child has become a man, and the generation has renewed itself since the march began. For fifteen hundred years this awful delusion has been leading the hosts of Asia to the regions of eternal night!

This picture (suggested by Dr. Culbertson's estimate of the population of China,) is not exaggerated. The worshipers of Budh are increasing with the population of the eastern world. The church in Christendom seems asleep! Fifteen thousand ministers of the gospel in the United States, with a population of 30,000,000, and two hundred in China, with a population of 400,000,000! The church in the United States gives less than twenty-five cents a member for the conversion of the heathen world, while the native Christian churches of Asia give more than one dollar to each member for the same purpose! The Budhists in China pay four times as much annually to support their religion as the Christians of the United States do for the support of the gospel! These are not guesses, but facts. When will Christians awake to their responsibilities to the heathen world? No wonder we find it difficult to maintain the conflict with the world around us. We are not doing our duty as a church. "Go ye into all the world," said the Saviour. But we will not go. Would a military commander dare treat the orders of his chief as we do the command of our risen Lord? Would a mercantile agent interpret thus loosely, or thus despise the instructions of his employer? The condition of the heathen world, going to destruction, is scarcely more melancholy than the Christian church asleep.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE Cathedral of St. Peter's, in Treves, Prussia, claims to possess the seamless garment of our Saviour, for which the soldiers cast lots. It was given to the cathedral by the Empress Helena. It is exhibited but four times in a century. At the last exhibition of it, in 1844, 1,100,000 pilgrims visited Treves to see it, and numerous miracles of healing are said to have been performed. Next year it will be again exhibited, and, says a Roman Catholic paper, "the sick and infirm will return healed, the blind will see, the deaf hear, the dumb speak to render thanks to Jesus Christ, and all these marvels will come to pass in the light of day."

THE Annals of the Propaganda give a flourishing account of the financial state of this great Roman Catholic Missionary Society. It has received the past year 5,145,558 francs, which is equal to $987,947 in gold. This sum is much less than is expended for Protestant missions; but is, no doubt, more economically applied. The missionaries are much more nearly self-supporting. The Annals is the only Roman Catholic missionary paper, and is circulated to the amount of 233,300 copies per month, in ten languages. The English edition consists of 20,000 copies.

HOW NAPLES WAS LIGHTED.

At the Leeds Missionary Anniversary meeting the Rev. William Arthur told the following anecdote:

"The people of Naples were very wishful to have the streets of the city illuminated at night, murders and robberies having become so frequent that but very few respectable persons could venture out after dark. The King of Naples was appealed to, and he appealed to the police. They told him that it could not be done. Every attempt to put up street lamps would prove ineffectual. Nobody would be able to protect them. Now, although there were no street lamps, there were pictures of the Madonna almost everywhere. Some one suggested that a certain celebrated preaching friar should be asked to exert his influence in the matter. This request was complied with, and the friar undertook the task allotted to him. St. Joseph's day was coming on. He announced that he would preach a sermon on the glory of St. Joseph. He did so. There was an immense concourse of the people to hear him. By way of peroration, he gave them this: 'Now, having shown you from the Scriptures, and the fathers, and the history of the church, and the lives of the saints, the glory of St. Joseph, let me tell you what has just happened. You remember such an one (a terrible fellow who had just before been executed.) You know what a life he lived, and what death he died. But just as he was dying he said: 'St. Joseph, I commit my soul to thee.' What did St. Joseph do? He went up to the Padre Eternal and said: 'Here is a soul that has been committed to me and I must get into heaven.' 'No, it is the soul of a murderer, and died without the sacraments—it cannot enter.' 'But it must enter.' 'No.' 'Then if it does not enter I will not stay.' 'It cannot be admitted.' 'But,' said St. Joseph, 'if I go, I shall not go alone—I shall take my wife with me.' Still the answer was: 'The soul cannot be admitted.' 'Very well, we shall go, and we will take our baby with us.' And so, he said, the Padre Eternal, rather than permit St. Joseph to leave heaven and take with him his wife and her son, was obliged to admit that soul into heaven! And now you see the glory of St. Joseph.' And they burst into a rapture, adoring the glory of St. Joseph. Then said he: 'What will you do for St. Joseph? Go and light a lamp every night before the pictures of the Madonna in all the streets of Naples.' And it was done."

Mr. Arthur said, he should like to know how to account for such superstition as that in Italy. He believed there was no explanation possible but one, and that was they had no Bible.

WITHIN the capital city of the Island of Madagascar, where so lately such terrible persecutions were suffered, containing a population of only 30,000, there are eight Christian congregations, with 12,400 hearers. Each congregation has more than 200 communicants. Within the villages of the country sixteen other churches have been founded.

OBITUARIES.

Died, in Warren county, Mississippi, on the 5th of April, WILLIE MCCAUGHEY, infant son of A. M. and S. E. Cameron, aged three months.

The dear little babe left an excellent father, a devoted mother, a most affectionate little sister on a Sabbath eve, and went to that bright world above, where Sabbaths end not.

Beautiful was the little body even in the embrace of death; but far more beautiful will it appear to you, sorrowing father, weeping mother and disconsolate sister, when you behold it on the resurrection morn, transformed like unto the glorious body of him who said "Suffer little children to come unto me."

"We lay them down—the loved of earth—
To sleep, to rise, to live again!
Where spirit dwells in all its worth,
And life is free from every pain."

A. B. S.

Died, in Lamar county, Texas, Mrs. ANN E. SHELTON, aged 39 years.

She was teaching a school in the neighborhood where she lived. One morning, feeling about as well as usual, she went to school, but before noon the good Lord saw fit to afflict her severely, and she was conveyed to a neighbor's house, where she died. We do not "sorrow because we have no hope." She led an exemplary life. She indeed possessed a sweet spirit. Her personal appearance was attractive, her mind clear; her perception quick, her countenance benignant and her voice sweet. It seemed to her a mysterious providence that she should be called away so soon, after having spent so much time in preparing to be useful. She indulged an ardent desire to live that she might "rear up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Nevertheless she could say, in the language of her Master: "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." But she died amid four weeping children (the oldest thirteen years of age, the youngest four) and friends. Poor children!—children for whom no mother's bosom throbs th soft sympathy and fond alarm." But, blessed be God, the light of immortality shines upon her grave.

Of our family only four are now living—two brothers and two sisters. Ten children, with father and mother, "have crossed the flood," and four of us are crossing now. May God sanctify our affliction to our spiritual advancement.

M. G. MCALISTER.

Died, on the 23d of March, 1868, AGNES KYLE, wife of H. L. Narramore, of Prattville, Alabama.

She was the daughter of G. W. White, formerly of Eutaw, Alabama, now of Itawamba county, Mississippi, was born on the 3d of May, 1828, and married on the 24th of December, 1846. She pledged herself to the service of Jesus, and joined the Methodist church in 1843.

These are the main points in the history of this good sister. All the intermediate spaces, and the relations which grew out of them, both social and domestic, were filled up and sustained in love, in patience, in gentleness and in fidelity, and the end was peace, perfect peace. In all the relations of life she acquitted herself with complete success, and especially as wife and mother. Here we would hold up her example as worthy the imitation of all. Her illness was brief, but in calm and holy triumph she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. Heaven is for such spirits, and there, we trust, her husband and seven little children may meet her "when the dream of life is fled."

RAILROAD ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY are authorized by acts of Congress to construct, with the aid and supervision of the United States Government, the western and principal portion of the National Trunk Line between the Pacific coast and the Mississippi valley. They have built by far the most difficult and expensive portion of their road, and have an unprecedented working force extending the track across the Salt Lake basin. By the close of 1868 it is expected they will have 100 miles in full operation, and that

THE ENTIRE LINE WILL BE COMPLETED IN 1870.

More than Twenty Millions of Dollars have been expended in the work, and the construction resources are ample for the remainder. They consist of

1. United States Bonds to the extent of $48,000 per mile, average, delivered as the work progresses.

2. First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, issued also according to the progress of the road, and having the preferred claim—superior to that of the Government.

3. Grant of Public Lands along the route, 12,800 acres per mile, or nearly ten million acres in all, which are now selling at the minimum rate of $2 50 per acre.

4. Capital stock of $20,000,000, of which $5,000,000 is subscribed and paid on the work done.

5. Cash resources, comprising donations from California sources amounting to $1,250,000, net earnings, etc., 1865 to 1870, $6,500,000, making a total of more than

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & Co.—I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely.—The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Your's, very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', Mass., June 9, '64.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine; and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than former ly. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair, With respect,
WM. S. EDDY.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND DOG.

For some days, during play hours, Paul Besard had wandered about like a troubled spirit. Edouard, his usual playmate, had shut himself up in the coach-house, which he forbade anybody to enter. Now Paul was a good little boy, gentle, obliging, affectionate; but he could not keep a secret. He was a terrible chatterbox, and fearing his chatter interested everybody; so his brothers had resolved not to trust him. He, greatly mortified, covered continually about the coach-house door, which Edouard kept always locked; and on going out doubled the key to Denis, the groom and gardener. Paul vainly tried to corrupt Denis, and get a peep into the coach-house; but the man was inexorable.

'You would see nothing there, Master Paul—even I don't know what Master Edouard is about.'

Poor Paul waited hopelessly, until one morning he perceived Edouard run out of the coach-house, leaving the door half open. He could hardly believe his eyes, and his heart beat so violently that he could scarcely descend the tree upon which he was perched; at last he reached the ground, and darted at once into the coach house.

What did he there behold—but a little cart! It was solidly built, and hung upon the wheels of an old carriage in which Lucie had been drawn when a baby. Its form was not elegant; indeed, it was just a square box; but it moved easily, and was so light that the delighted little fellow prepared to drag it out into the yard, when he heard Edouard at full speed, accompanied by the big watch-dog, which he had been to let loose.

Labrador was a magnificent dog of the Newfoundland breed, gigantic in size, yet perfectly gentle with the children, who had accustomed him to lend himself to all their whims; also he was a first-rate watch-dog—woe to the beggar who, after dusk, came within the precincts of La Vacherie. But now, Labrador was apparently intended to be used as a horse, being harnessed with ropes carefully disposed and fastened to a leathern collar.

'What are you doing there, Paul?' cried Edouard, as soon as he saw him.

'You left the door open, I had nothing to do, so I went in.'

'Oh, very well—I don't mind My work is done now, so you can't blab of my secret. What do you think of the cart?'

'It is—very solid,' said Paul, hesitatingly, 'but—but—not quite like papa's carts.'

'Of course not. It is only an old box, in which somebody sent us those prunes—which were very good, you know, though ours are better.'

'Yes; because mamma dries them herself. But what are you doing with Labrador?'

'I am going to make him draw my cart, and this evening we will go and fetch the fir-cones for mamma. Didn't I say I would get a cart and horse that nobody else could make use of?'

'But we do make use of Labrador.'

'Only as a watch-dog, not as a horse. But you'll see how well he will go.'

The poor dog, who had rather a melancholy air, allowed himself to be attached to the shafts of the cart.

'Stop, I must fetch my whip,' said Edouard, greatly pleased. 'Mind Labrador till I come back.'

Edouard ran in doors, bounded up stairs, heard Lucie calling him, but without giving himself the trouble to answer, sprang down again and darted off to the coach-house. It was high time he got there! Alas! the cart, Labrador, and Paul were all struggling on the floor in a confused mass. Paul screamed; Labrador barked; the cart alone was dumb, but not the least unfortunate of the three.

Edouard, in a fury, struck both Paul and Labrador with his whip; and while he helped them to get up with one hand, with the other he felt for his cart—the front part of it had all come to pieces.

'What mischief you have done!' cried he angrily to his brother. 'One can't turn one's back but you interfere and spoil everything.'

Paul began to cry. 'It isn't my fault; Labrador is not accustomed to stand quiet between shafts. I dare say he felt tired and wanted to lie down, and the cart fell upon him.'

'And where were you, that you did the same?'

'I wished—I thought—In truth, I just got into the cart—'

'Ay, that was it; I see!—Now, sir, if you ever dare to get into my cart without my express permission, you shall not come within a mile of it. I made it to carry mamma's fir-cones, and not a fat little wretch like you. It will take me all day to repair this damage. Look here, Charles.'

Fortunately Charles, who just then came up, had a much stronger wrist than his brother's, and with half a dozen well-applied hammer-strokes restored the cart to its usual state, and then advised Edouard to make it more secure with some pieces of string. This done the cart seemed as serviceable as ever, and Edouard declared he should have more than enough room in it for the fir-cones. He therefore ordered Labrador to lie down and took the place of honor between the shafts.

Lucie, tired of waiting for her elder brothers, had condescended to accept Gustave's proposal to help they should make a garden and a bower in a retired corner, which had been left for the use of the children; and was busily employed upon this work with great gravity in order to frame the walks, when she heard the jerkings of the whip, the outcries of the boys, and the rumbling of wheels.

'Gustave, Gustave, come here!' said, running to meet their brothers she was more with surprise and admiration at sight of Labrador and the beautiful cart. 'These are the wheels of my old carriage, and there is the old prune box: I see the rain-way mark upon it. But what is it to be used for?'

Gustave, less quick than Lucie, was greatly puzzled. Ideas came to him slowly, and he had to pause and think, while his livelier sister darted direct to her point.

'Don't you see, it is the cart Edouard promised us to carry fir-cones. How good Labrador stands! Are you sure these old ropes don't hurt him, Edouard?'

'Old ropes, indeed! Lucie, you'll please speak more respectfully of my harness. For Labrador, nothing hurts him. I'm off to mamma to ask if we may go to-night to fetch the fir-cones.'

'Not to-night; we shall have no time,' said Lucie.

'And it will be so dark under the trees,' said Gustave.

Charles suggested lanterns—a procession by torchlight.

Paul doubted his father's permission for that, and proposed their going next day, as it was Thursday.

'All days are Thursdays to Charles and me,' replied Edouard. 'It is our holidays; but you little folk who idle all the year round, you get no holidays.'

'Edouard, I don't idle, indeed!' protested Lucie.

'Bah! girls never work, like boys. I only wish you were at college.'

'But I am too little; only six years old.'

'If you were twelve it would be just the same. No, now men work in our way, and women in yours. I shouldn't like to sew on buttons and mend shirts like mamma.'

Here Charles broke in, and asked if they were to stay chattering here or go and show the cart to their mother?

'Very well, march on!' cried Edouard and Paul together; and giving a touch of the whip to Labrador, who had laid himself down between the shafts with a resigned air, they arrived with a great noise and clattering in front of the little study where Madame Bessard sat writing her letters. Lucie ran in breathless.

'Oh, mamma, do come and see our beautiful little carriage!'

The boys began all speaking at once.

'Isn't it pretty? isn't it comfortable? It is to fetch fir-cones out of the wood. Please, mamma, may we go to-morrow? it's Thursday.'

'Yes, yes, yes; don't quite deafen me, children. Edouard, I congratulate you. You have made useless things useful. Besides, I shall have the pleasure of informing your father that he has one more beast of burden in his stable.'

'No, no, mamma,' cried the boys, laughing. 'Labrador is our horse, ours entirely; but we will sometimes lend him to you. Never to papa, who has quite enough of horses. Now, let us put up our carriage in the coach-house.'

By unheard-of good luck, in spite of the excitement of the charioteers, the chariot was deposited in safety; and next day, at one o'clock, the children went in a body to fetch Labrador out of his kennel. Poor dog! he dropped his ears despondently, as if foreseeing what was going to happen to him; but Lucie's coaxings at last got him out; he seemed fully to understand her entreaties. The children were accustomed to manage their own affairs, Charles, a big boy of fifteen, taking care of the little ones. They started for the wood; their lunch, carefully packed in a basket, being placed in the cart.

'Have we any glasses, Lucie?' suddenly asked Paul.

'No; mamma says we always break them; but she has given us a cocoanut cup to get water from the stream.'

'That's right, for the cart shakes dreadfully; and the luncheon-basket has already made some fearful jumps.'

Arrived at the heap of fir-cones, the basket was taken out of the cart, and everybody set busily to work. Gustave and Lucie did not do much; they were too little to throw the cones in the cart, and their brothers found it much easier to do the lading of it themselves than to make use of the two little hands that were always in the way. At last, the cart was filled and everybody declared.

The basket was next filled, when Charles proposed that Labrador should have his turn. Edouard was willing enough, but the great block of wood would not hang to the shafts, and Labrador refused to stir. Charles proposed that they should make a garden and a bower in a retired corner, which had been left for the use of the children; and was busily employed upon this work with great gravity in order to frame the walks, when he heard the jerkings of the whip, the outcries of the boys, and the rumbling of wheels.

'Gustave, Gustave, come here!' said, running to meet their brothers she was more with surprise and admiration at sight of Labrador and the beautiful cart. 'These are the wheels of my old carriage, and there is the old prune box: I see the rain-way mark upon it. But what is it to be used for?'

Gustave, less quick than Lucie, was greatly puzzled. Ideas came to him slowly, and he had to pause and think, while his livelier sister darted direct to her point.

'Don't you see, it is the cart Edouard promised us to carry fir-cones. How good Labrador stands! Are you sure these old ropes don't hurt him, Edouard?'

'Old ropes, indeed! Lucie, you'll please speak more respectfully of my harness. For Labrador, nothing hurts him. I'm off to mamma to ask if we may go to-night to fetch the fir-cones.'

'Not to-night; we shall have no time,' said Lucie.

'And it will be so dark under the trees,' said Gustave.

Charles suggested lanterns—a procession by torchlight.

Paul doubted his father's permission for that, and proposed their going next day, as it was Thursday.

'All days are Thursdays to Charles and me,' replied Edouard. 'It is our holidays; but you little folk who idle all the year round, you get no holidays.'

'Edouard, I don't idle, indeed!' protested Lucie.

'Bah! girls never work, like boys. I only wish you were at college.'

'But I am too little; only six years old.'

'If you were twelve it would be just the same. No, now men work in our way, and women in yours. I shouldn't like to sew on buttons and mend shirts like mamma.'

Here Charles broke in, and asked if they were to stay chattering here or go and show the cart to their mother?

'Very well, march on!' cried Edouard and Paul together; and giving a touch of the whip to Labrador, who had laid himself down between the shafts with a resigned air, they arrived with a great noise and clattering in front of the little study where Madame Bessard sat writing her letters. Lucie ran in breathless.

'Oh, mamma, do come and see our beautiful little carriage!'

The boys began all speaking at once.

'Isn't it pretty? isn't it comfortable? It is to fetch fir-cones out of the wood. Please, mamma, may we go to-morrow? it's Thursday.'

'Yes, yes, yes; don't quite deafen me, children. Edouard, I congratulate you. You have made useless things useful. Besides, I shall have the pleasure of informing your father that he has one more beast of burden in his stable.'

'No, no, mamma,' cried the boys, laughing. 'Labrador is our horse, ours entirely; but we will sometimes lend him to you. Never to papa, who has quite enough of horses. Now, let us put up our carriage in the coach-house.'

By unheard-of good luck, in spite of the excitement of the charioteers, the chariot was deposited in safety; and next day, at one o'clock, the children went in a body to fetch Labrador out of his kennel. Poor dog! he dropped his ears despondently, as if foreseeing what was going to happen to him; but Lucie's coaxings at last got him out; he seemed fully to understand her entreaties. FARM AND GARDEN.

VARIETY AT THE TABLE.—TWO "BILLS OF FARE."

Variety is said to be the spice of life. Our good housewives seem to believe the adage, so far as it respects food, for what one of them is there who is not always worrying herself over the question, "what shall I get for breakfast, or dinner, for a variety?" Some time since we referred to the experience of a lady who kept three cards on which she had written down: 1st. The names of articles always at hand, and good for breakfast at all seasons; 2d. Those not so common or not always to be desired. The other two cards, one for noon, and the other for evening, contained similar lists for those meals. She stated that it was often a relief or help to run her eye over the cards, and select what she would have, without delay. Mrs. A. M. Hoffman sends to the American Agriculturist the following programme, or bill of fare, for a week's meals during two seasons of the year, which we print as suggestive. Such a variety can only be provided at the tables of well-to-do families, and with plenty of room and help, but every housekeeper can change and modify it to suit her own circumstances.

FOR SPRING.

MONDAY.—Breakfast: Minced veal, omelette, fried potatoes, milk toast, coffee. Dinner: Beefsteak, mashed potatoes, salsify, horseradish, custards. Tea: Dried beef, biscuits, canned fruit, Sally cake. As Monday is "washing day," would not the variety proposed for breakfast occupy the whole stove or range, to the exclusion of the boiler, which should be early at work heating water? And would not the preparation occupy too much time of the help, if the cook also does the washing?—ED.

TUESDAY.—Breakfast: Ham and eggs, potatoes warmed in cream, Indian cakes, maple syrup. Dinner: Veal pie, boiled potatoes, spinach, fried parsnips, baked batter pudding, with sauce of butter and sugar stirred to a cream, flavored to suit the taste. Tea: Waffles, maple syrup, or maple sugar shaved fine.

WEDNESDAY.—Breakfast: Dried beef cooked with eggs and cream, baked potatoes, muffins, coffee. Dinner: Beef soup, baked fish, vinegar sauce, potatoes mashed, fried parsnips, horseradish, Marlborough pie. Tea: Canned cherries, egg puffs, New England gingerbread.

THURSDAY.—Breakfast: Fried liver, fried potatoes, scrambled eggs, mush of Graham flour, eaten with syrup or cream and sugar. Dinner: Beef pie of Wednesday's soup-meat, spinach, asparagus, boiled potatoes, rolypoly pudding. Tea: Boiled custards, stewed or canned raspberries, Graham bread, sponge cake.

FRIDAY.—Breakfast: Fried potatoes, [illegible] eggs, [illegible] potatoes, [illegible] Dinner: [illegible] potatoes, [illegible] Tea: [illegible]

SATURDAY.—Breakfast: Mock-oysters or green corn cakes, fried potatoes, cucumbers, radishes, hot rolls, coffee. Dinner: Vegetable soup of beef, Irish stew of the soup-meat, boiled potatoes, French turnips with cream, green apple pie. Tea: Rusks, cheese, blackberries, baked sweet apples.

SUNDAY.—Breakfast: Minced codfish with hard boiled eggs, potatoes in cream, corn bread, coffee. Dinner: Roast pig, cold, currant jelly, stewed apples, succotash, hot slaugh, boiled onions, potatoes, watermelons, plums and peaches, raspberry shrub. Tea: Biscuits, peaches and cream, fruit cake, jelly cake, lemonade instead of tea (the day being very hot.)—American Agriculturist.

As Rev. Dr. James Hamilton, the celebrated pastor of the National Scotch church in London, author of 'Attractions of the Bible,' etc., lay dying, his brother called to see him, who said: 'Stepping into his room he welcomed me in his own peculiar manner.' 'My dear William, how glad I am to see you! How kind of you to come so far!' 'I have just come,' is the reply, 'to let you know, dear James, how many of us are envying you your happiness in being so near home.' 'I sometimes hope it may be so,' is the rejoinder, 'and yet I may, perhaps, be disappointed; you cannot be long here; you will be at home in a day or two, or perhaps in a few hours.' He then brightened up and gave us such a loving look. 'Oh, William, you have brought me good news indeed; how kind of you to tell me this. Present with the Lord! At home with the Lord! Oh, how beautiful; how beautiful!' Then, after a pause, 'Oh, William, you are a happy man. You are strong and well; and you have the wondrous privilege of preaching the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ.'

DISRAELI has given a party; and it is said that so brilliant an assembly never was gathered before, save at the command of the sovereign. The proudest of the aristocracy came to do homage to the parvenu who has raised himself to a place above them all; and, to crown all, royalty itself mingled in the throng. Mr. Disraeli first escorted the Princess Christian, and then the Princess of Wales, while the royal princes attended Mrs. Disraeli through an admiring crowd. The new foreign office was not large enough to hold the guests, and the premier's triumph was complete.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J. E. C Doremus, D. D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 32d parallel of North latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $50 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not; to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.; by founding or reviving Auxiliaries; by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, a prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God; for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heartery of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. a25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work; and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is, in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.
